If there is any good in philosophy, it is this—that it never looks into pedigrees. (Si quid autem allud in philosophia boni, hoc est, quod stemma non inspicit.)

SENECA, Epistula ad Luciliam. Epis. xlv, sec. 1.

Without philosophy the mind is sickly, and the body, too, though it may be very powerful, is strong only as that of a madman is strong.

SENECA, Epistula ad Luciliam. Epis. xv, sec. 2.

Life is the gift of the immortal gods, but living well is the gift of philosophy. (Decum immortalium munus sit quod vivimus, philosophia quod bene vivimus.)

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act I, sc. 1, l. 28.

IV.—Philosophy: Its Faults

As for the philosophers, they make imaginary laws for imaginary commonwealths; and their discourses are as the stars, which give little light, because they are so high.

FRANCIS BACON, Advancement of Learning: Civil Knowledge.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,
And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;
Whate'er the crabbed'st author hath,
He understood b' implicit faith.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. I, canto I, l. 127.

There was an ancient sage philosopher,
That had read Alexander Ross over,
And swore the world, as he could prove,
Was made of fighting and of love.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. I, canto II, l. 1.

No statement is too absurd for some philosophers to make. (Nihil tam absurde dici potest quod non dicatur ab aliquo philosophorum.)

CICERO, De Divinatione. Bk. II, ch. 58, sec. 119.

I hate the philosopher who is not wise for himself. (Μισῶ φιλόσοφον, ὅστις οὐκ αὐτῷ σοφός.)

⁷ Wild was the day; the wintry sea
Moaned sadly on New England's strand,
When first the thoughtful and the free,
Our fathers, trod the desert land.
BRYANT, The Twenty-Second of December.

⁸ They fell upon an ungenial climate . . . that called out the best energies of the men, and of the women too, to get a mere subsistence out of the soil. In their efforts to do that, they cultivated industry and frugality at the same time—which is the real foundation of the greatness of the Pilgrims.
ULYSSES S. GRANT, Speech, New England Society Dinner, 22 Dec., 1890.

⁹ What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?
—They sought a faith's pure shrine!
FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS, The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod!
They have left unstained what there they found—
Freedom to worship God!

⁴ Like two cathedral towers these stately pines Uplift their fretted summits tipped with cones;

The arch beneath them is not built with stones,
Not Art but Nature traced these lovely lines,
And carved this graceful arabesque of vines;
No organ but the wind here sighs and moans,
No sepulchre conceals a martyr's bones,
No marble bishop on his tomb reclines.
Enter! the pavement, carpeted with leaves,
Gives back a softened echo to thy tread!
Listen! the choir is singing; all the birds,
In leafy galleries beneath the eaves,
Are singing! listen, ere the sound be fled,
And learn there may be worship without words.

LOWMELOW, My Cathedral.

SIR WILLIAM D'AVYANT, Gondibert: Preface.

The Plagiarism of orators is the art, or an ingenious and easy mode, which some adroitly employ, to change, or disguise, all sorts of speeches of their own composition, or that of other authors, for their pleasure, or their utility; in such a manner that it becomes impossible even for the author himself to recognise his own work, his own genius, and his own style, so skilfully shall the whole be disguised.

SIEUR DE RICHEL-SOURCE, The Mask of Orators.

(Quoted by ISAAC D'ISRAELI, Curiosities of Literature: Professors of Plagiarism, who says that Richel-Source invented "plagiarism" to describe a peculiarly artful kind of literary theft.)

11 They steal my thunder!

JOHN DENNIS.

Our author, for the advantage of this play (Appius and Virginia), had invented a new species of thunder, the very sort that at present is used in the theatre. The tragedy itself was coldly received, notwithstanding such assistance, and was acted but a short time. Some nights after, Mr. Dennis, being in the pit at the representation of Macbeth, heard his own thunder made use of, upon which he rose in a violent passion, and exclaimed, with an oath, that it was his thunder "See how the rascals use me!" said he, "They will not let my play run, and yet they steal my thunder!"

12 He that readeth good writers and picks out their flowers for his own nose, is like a fool.

STEPHEN GOSSEN, The School of Abuse: Lutersers. (1579)

13 Nothing is stolen: my Muse, though mean, Draws from the spring she finds within.

MATTHEW GREEN, The Spleen, l. 13.

14 My books need no title or judge to prove them, your page stares you in the face and says, "You are a thief!" (Indice non opus est nostris nec iudice libris; Stat contra dicitur tibi tua pagina "Fur es.")

MARTIAL, Epigrams Bk. i, epig. 53.

Why, simpleton, do you mix your verses with mine? What have you to do, foolish man, with writings that convict you of theft? Why do you attempt to associate foxes with lions, and make owls pass for eagles? Though you had one of Ladas's legs, you would not be able, blockhead, to run with the other leg of wood.

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. x, ep. 100.

15 Every generation has the privilege of standing on the shoulders of the generation that went before; but it has no right to pick the pockets of the first-comer.

BRANDER MATTHEWS, Recreations of an Anthropologist, p. 20.

For such kind of borrowing as this, if it be not bettered by the borrower, among good authors is accounted plagiarism.

MILTON, Iconoclasts, Ch. 23.

I recover my property wherever I find it. (Je reprends mon bien où je le trouve.)

MOLIERE, taking possession of and using several times in his Les Fourberies de Scapin, the famous phrase, "What the devil was he doing in that galley?" (Que diable allait-il faire dans cette galère?), which he claimed Cyrano de Bergerac had stolen from him and used in his Pédant Joué (Act II, sc. 4). Emerson (Letters and Social Aims) attributed the mot to Marmontel.

He liked those literary cooks
Who skim the cream of others' books;
And ruin half an author's graces
By plucking bon-mots from their places.

HANNAH MORE, Florio, the Bas-Bleu.

It brings praise to me that you and those like you, copy my words into your books. (Mihi paria laus est, quod tu, quod similes tui, Vestras in chartas verba transfertis mea.)

PLAUTUS, Fables: Bk. V, Prologue, l. 17.

In comparing various authors with one another, I have discovered that some of the gravest and latest writers have transcribed, word for word, from former works, without making acknowledgment.

PLINY THE ELDER, Historia Naturalis: Bk. I, Dedication. Sec. 22.

Next o'er his books his eyes began to roll,
In pleasing memory of all he stole;
How here he sipp'd, how there he plunder'd snug,

And suck'd all o'er like an industrious bug.

POPE, The Dunciad. Bk. I, l. 127.

Little would be left you, I'm afraid,
If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid.

POPE, Prologue, Designed for Mr. D'Urfey's Last Play, l. 13.

Most writers steal a good thing when they can,
And when 'tis safely got 'tis worth the winning.

The worst of 't is we now and then detect 'em.

Before they ever dream that we suspect 'em.

BRYAN WALLIS PROCTOR, Diego de Montilla.

Libertas et natale solem:

Fine words! I wonder where you stole 'em.

SWIFT, Verses Occasioned by Whittshed's Motto on His Coach, 1724. Whittshed was the Chief-Justice who twice prosecuted the "Drapier." The motto is mentioned repeatedly in the Drapier Letters.

I wrote these lines, another wears the bays:
Thus you for others build your nests, O birds:
Thus you for others bear your fleece, O sheep:
Thus you for others honey make, O bees:
Thus you for others drag the plough, O kine!

(Hos ego versiculos feci, tulit alter honores:

Sic vos non vobis nidificatis aves:

Sic vos non vobis vellera fertis oves:

Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes:

Sic vos non vobis fertis arata boves.)

VERGIL, Epigram. (CAIUS TIBERIUS DONATUS,

Life of Vergil, p. 17. Brummer's edn. in Latin.) The story is that a versifier named Bathyllus had stolen a distich of Vergil's in honor of Augustus, and, in the presence of the Emperor, Vergil wrote beneath the distich four lines beginning, "Sic vos non vobis," and challenged Bathyllus to complete them. He was unable to do so, and Vergil did it as above.

The seed ye sow, another reaps;

The wealth ye find, another keeps;

The robe ye weave, another wears;

The arms ye forge, another bears.

SHELLEY, Song to the Men of England.

Read my little fable:

He that runs may read.

Most can raise the flowers now,

For all have got the seed.

TENNYSOON, The Flower.

Though I am young, I scorn to flit

On the wings of borrowed wit.

GEORGE WITHER, The Shepherd's Hunting.

Who borrow much, then fairly make it known,

And damn it with improvements of their own.

YOUNG, Love of Fame, Sat. III, l. 23.

II—Plagiarism: Excuse

We can say nothing but what has been said.
... Our poets steal from Homer. ... Our storydressers do as much; he that comes last is commonly best.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy: Democritus to the Reader.

When 'Omer smote 'is bloomin' lyre,

He'd 'card men sing by land an' sea;

An' what he thought 'e might require,

'E went an' took—the same as me!

RUDYARD KIPLING, Barrack-Room Ballads: Introduction.

Thus the artless songs I sing

Do not deal with anything

New or never said before.

RUDYARD KIPLING, A General Summary.

That's of no consequence; all that can be said is, that two people happened to hit on the same thought—and Shakespeare made use of it first, that's all.

SHERIDAN, The Critic. Act III, sc. 1.

Then why should those who pick and choose
The best of all the best compose,
And join it by Mosaic art,
In graceful order, part to part,
To make the whole in beauty suit,
Not merit as complete repute
As those who with less art and pains
Can do it with their native brains?

SAMUEL BUTLER, Satire upon Plagiarism, l. 109.

It is as difficult to appropriate the thoughts of others as it is to invent.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Quotation and Originality.

It has come to be practically a sort of rule in literature, that a man, having once shown himself capable of original writing, is entitled thenceforth to steal from the writings of others at discretion. Thought is the property of him who can entertain it, and of him who can adequately place it.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Shakespeare. Every man is a borrower and a mimic, life is theatrical and literature a quotation.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Success.

Take the whole range of imaginative literature, and we are all wholesale borrowers. In every matter that relates to invention, to use, or beauty or form, we are borrowers.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Lecture: The Lost Arts.

You have a memory that would convict any author of plagiarism in any court of literature in the world.

JOHN HAWKESWORTH, Remark, to Dr. Johnson. (KEANSLEY, Johnsoniana. No. 600.)

Though old the thought and oft exprest,
'Tis his at last who says it best.

J. R. LOWELL, For an Autograph. St. 1.

The bees pillage the flowers here and there but they make honey of them which is all their own; it is no longer thyme or marjoram: so the pieces borrowed from others he will transform and mix up into a work all his own.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. I, ch. 25.

Amongst so many borrowed things, I am glad if I can steal one, disguising and altering it for some new service.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. III, ch. 12.

Poetry, drawing within its circle all that is glorious and inspiring, gave itself but little concern as to where its flowers originally grew.

KARL OTTFRIED MÜLLER. (EMERSON, Quotation and Originality.)

Whatever is well said by another, is mine.
(Quicquid bene dictum est ab ullo, meum est.)

SENeca, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. xvi, 7.

Not a translation—only taken from the French.

SHERIDAN, The Critic. Act I, sc. 1.

I have thus played the sedulous ape to, Hazlitt, to Lamb, to Wordsworth, to Sir Thomas Browne, to Defoe, to Hawthorne, to Montaigne, to Baudelaire and to Obermann.

R. L. STEVENSON, Memories and Portraits. Ch. 4.

Nothing is said nowadays that has not been said before. (Nullumst jam dictum quod non sit dictum prius.)

TERENCE, Eunuchus: Prologue, l. 41.

Perish those who said our good things before us.
(Percant qui ante nos nostra dixerunt.)

ÆLIUS DONATUS. (St. JEROME, Commentaries: Ecclesiastes. Ch. I.) Referring to the phrase of Terence.

Their writings are thefts which they have made from us in advance. (Leurs écrits sont des vols qu'ils nous ont faits d'avance.)

ALEXIS PIROU, Epigram.

All the makers of dictionaries, all compilers who do nothing else than repeat backwards and forwards the opinions, the errors, the impostures, and the truths already printed, we may term plagiarists; but honest plagiarists, who arrogate not the merit of invention.

VOLTARE, A Philosophical Dictionary: Plagiarism.

Call them if you please bookmakers, not authors; range them rather among second-hand dealers than plagiarists.

VOLTARE, A Philosophical Dictionary: Plagiarism.

PLATITUDE

I am not fond of uttering platitudes
In stained-glass attitudes.

W. S. GILBERT, Patience. Act 1.

Thou say'st an undisputed thing
In such a solemn way.

O. W. HOLMES, To an Insect.

The moral commonplaces.

SIR PHILIP SKEWTON, Apology for Poetry. Pt. II, sec. 1.

Hail to Martin Farquhar Tupper!
Who, when he bestrides the crupper
Of Pegasus, gets the upper Hand of poets more renowned;

Suited to all times and latitudes,

By the everlasting platitudes.

RICHARD HENRY STODDARD, Proverbial Philosophy.

¹ In modern life nothing produces such an effect as a good platitude. It makes the whole world kin.

OSCAR WILDE, An Ideal Husband. Act I.

PLATO

² And as when Plato did in the cradle thrive,
Bees to his lips brought honey from their hive.

WILLIAM BROWN, Britannia's Pastorals. Pt. II.

³ Oh, Plato! Plato! you have paved the way,
With your confounded fantasies, to more
Immoral conduct by the fancied sway
Your system feigns o'er the controulless core
Of human hearts, than all the long array
Of poets and romancers.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto I, st. 116.

An attachment à la Plato for a bashful young potato, or a not-too-French French bean.

W. S. GILBERT, Patience. Act I.

⁴ From a wedding-banquet he has passed to that city which he had founded for himself and planted in the sky.

DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Epitaph on Plato. (Bk. III, sec. 45.) Plato is said to have died at a wedding-banquet.

⁵ Out of Plato come all things that are still written and debated among men of thought.
Great havoc makes he among our originalities.
... Plato is philosophy and philosophy Plato,—at once the glory and the shame of mankind, since neither Saxon nor Roman have availed to add any idea to his categories.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Plato.

Plato has no external biography. If he had lover, wife, or children, we hear nothing of them. He ground them all into paint.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Plato.

⁶ See there the olive grove of Academe,
Plato's retirement, where the Attic bird Trills her thick-warb'd notes the summer long.

MILTON, Paradise Regained. Bk. IV, l. 244.

⁷ Come hither, O fire-god, Plato has need of thee. ("ἵλασσε, πῦρ, ὅδε ἱλασθῶν πῦρ τὶ σοῦ χρήσιον.")

PLATO, consigning to the flames, after listening to Socrates, the manuscript of a tragedy he had written in competition for a prize.

⁸ Philosophy did not find Plato already a nobleman, it made him one. (Platonem non accepit nobilem philosophia, sed fecit.)

SENeca, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epist. XLIV, 3.

PLEASURE

⁹ He, if anyone, had the highest meed of praise for wisdom, and was too great for envy.

UNKNOWN, Epitaph on Plato. (Greek Anthology, VII, 60.)

Ariston's son, whom every good man honors, because he discerned the divine life.

Pleasure

I—Pleasure: Definitions

¹⁰ The great pleasure in life is doing what people say you cannot do.

WALTER BAGEHOT, Literary Studies. Vol. I, p. 171.

¹¹ Pleasure may perfect us as truly as prayer.

W. E. CHANNING, Note-Book: Joy.

¹² Nor do I call pleasures idleness, or time lost, provided they are the pleasures of a rational being.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 30 Oct., 1747.

Distinguish carefully between the pleasures of a man of fashion, and the vices of a scoundrel; pursue the former, and abhor the latter, like a man of sense.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 25 Jan., 1750.

Pleasure must not, nay, cannot, be the business of a man of sense and character; but it may be,
and is, his relief, his reward.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 8 May, 1750.

¹³ The pleasure of life is according to the man that lives it, and not according to the work or place.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Fate.

¹⁴ Wherefore we call pleasure the alpha and omega of a blessed life. Pleasure is our first and kindred good. (Ταύτην γὰρ ἀγαθὸν πρῶτον καὶ ὀψιμώτατον ἔχοντες.)

EPICURUS, Letter to Menæceus. (DIOGENES
LAERTIUS, Epicurus. Bk. X, sec. 128.)

When we say, then, that pleasure is the end and aim of life, we do not mean the pleasures of the prodigal or the pleasures of sensuality. . . .
By pleasure we mean the absence of pain in the body and of trouble in the soul.

EPICURUS, Letter to Menæceus. (DIOGENES
LAERTIUS, Epicurus. Bk. X, sec. 131.)

Some sages have defin'd

Pleasure the sov'reign bliss of humankind.

POPE, January and May, l. 440.

It is impossible to live pleasantly without living wisely and well and justly; and it is impossible to live wisely and well and justly without living pleasantly.

EPICURUS, Souren Maxims. No. 5.

¹ The sine qua non of pleasure is virtue, for it is the one thing without which pleasure cannot be.

EPICURUS. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Epicurus. Bk. x, sec. 138.)

Pleasure the servant, Virtue looking on.

BYN JONSON, Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue.

Pleasure is nought but virtue's gayer name.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 573.

² I know not how to conceive the good, apart from the pleasures of taste, sexual pleasures, the pleasures of sound, and the pleasures of beautiful form.

EPICURUS. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Epicurus. Bk. x, sec. 6.)

The main Maxim of Epicurus's Philosophy was to trust to his Senses and follow his nose.

RICHARD BENTLEY, Boyle Lectures, ii, 79.

For he was Epicurus own son.

CHAUCER, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 336.

³ There are only three pleasures in life pure and lasting, and all are derived from inanimate things—books, pictures, and the face of nature.

HAZLITT, Criticisms on Art. Vol. i, p. 40.

⁴ Pleasure is far sweeter as a recreation, than a business.

R. D. HINCHCOCK, Eternal Atonement, viii.

⁵ Pleasure, or wrong or rightly understood, Our greatest evil or our greatest good.

POPE, An Essay on Man. Epis. ii, l. 91.

Pleasure, we both agree, is man's chief good; Our only contest, what deserves the name.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 1027.

⁶ Learn thou, whate'er the motive they may call,
That Pleasure is the aim, and Self the spring of all.

ROBERT SOUTHY, The Poet's Pilgrimage to Waterloo. Pt. ii, canto i, st. 22.

II—Pleasure: Apothegms

⁷ Perils commonly ask to be paid in pleasures.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Love.

⁸ Pleasure's devious way.

BURNS, The Vision.

⁹ Oh Pleasure! you're indeed a pleasant thing,
Although one must be damned for you, no doubt.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i, st. 119.

¹⁰ I'm going to "go it" a bit before I settle down.
I have gone it a bit already, and I'm going to "go it" a bit more.

HENRY J. BYRON, Our Boys. Act i.

¹¹ Leave business to Idlers, and wisdom to fools: they have need of 'em: wit, be my faculty, and pleasure my occupation.

CONGREVE, The Old Bachelor. Act i, sc. 1.

The rule of my life is to make business a pleasure, and pleasure my business.

AARON BURN, Letter to Pickens.

¹² When Sissy got into the school here . . . her father was as pleased as Punch.

DICKENS, Hard Times. Bk. i, ch. 6.

I was (as the poet says) as pleased as Punch.

THOMAS MOORE, Letter to Lady Donegal.

¹³ It is the part of the wise man to resist pleasures, but of a foolish one to be a slave to them.

EPICETUS, Fragment. No. 111.

¹⁴ Follow pleasure, and then will pleasure flee;

Flee pleasure, and pleasure will follow thee.

RAYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 10.

Thus pleasure oft eludes our grasp;
Just when we think to grip her;

And hunting after Happiness

We only hunt a slipper.

THOMAS HOOD, The Epping Hunt: Moral.

Pleasure is very seldom found where it is sought.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Idler. No. 58.

In life there is nothing more unexpected and surprising than the arrivals and departures of pleasure. If we find it in one place to-day, it is vain to seek it there to-morrow. You can not lay a trap for it.

19 Man could direct his ways by plain reason, and support his life by tasteless food; but God has given us wit, and flavour, and brightness, and laughter, and perfumers, to enliven the days of man's pilgrimage, and to "charm his pained steps over the burning marle."

SYDNEY SMITH, *Dangers and Advantages of

'Tis sweet to be awaken'd by the lark,
Or lul'd by falling waters; sweet the hum
Of bees, the voice of girls, the song of birds,
The lisp of children, and their earliest words.
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i, st. 123.

20 I built my soul a lordly pleasure-house,
Wherein at ease for aye to dwell.

I said, "O Soul, make merry and carouse,
Dear soul, for all is well."

That sweet taste of pleasure unpursued.
WORDSWORTH, The Old Cumberland Beggar.

22 Pleasure's the mistress of ethereal powers;
For her contend the rival gods above; Pleasure's the mistress of the world below; . . .

What is the pulse of this so busy world?
The love of pleasure: that, thro' ev'ry vein,

Throws motion, warmth, and shuts out death from life.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 533.

The love of pleasure is man's eldest-born,
Born in his cradle, living to his tomb;
Wisdom, her younger sister, tho' more grave,
Was meant to minister, and not to mar,
Imperial pleasure, queen of human hearts.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 595.

IV—Pleasure: Its Sting

1 No more deadly curse has been given by nature to man than carnal pleasure. From it come treason and overthrow of states. There is no criminal purpose and no evil deed which the lust for pleasure will not drive men to undertake. Since nature—or some god, perhaps—has given to man nothing more excellent than his intellect, therefore this divine gift has no deadlier foe than pleasure; for where lust holds despotic sway self-control has no place, and in pleasure's realm there is not a single spot where virtue can put her foot.

ARCHYTAS OF TARENTUM. (CICERO, De Senectute. Ch. xii, sec. 39.)

There is nothing so hateful and so pernicious as pleasure, since, if indulged in too much and too long, it turns the light of the soul into utter darkness. (Quodcirca nihil esse tam detestabile tamque pestiferum quam voluptatem, si quidem ea, cum major esset longior, omne animi lumen exstinguere.)

ARCHYTAS OF TARENTUM. (CICERO, De Senectute. Ch. xii, sec. 41.)

Carnal pleasure hinders deliberation, is at war with reason, blindfolds the eyes of the mind, so to speak, and has no fellowship with virtue. (Impedit consilium voluptas, rationi inimica est, mentis ut ita dicam præstringit oculos, nec habet ullum cum virtute commercium.)

CICERO, De Senectute. Ch. xii, sec. 42.

2 Punish not thyself with pleasure; glut not thy sense with palative delights.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Christian Morals. Pt. II, sec. 1.

3 Pleasure (whene'er she sings, at least)'s a siren,
That lures, to slay alive, the young beginner.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto iii, st. 36.

Though sages may pour out their wisdom's treasure,
There is no sterner moralist than Pleasure.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto iii, st. 65.

4 Pleasure is the rock which most young people split upon: they launch out with crowded sails in quest of it, but without a compass to direct their course, or reason sufficient to steer the vessel.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 27 March, 1747.

Every virtue, they say, has its kindred vice; every pleasure, I am sure, has its neighbouring disgrace.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 5 Feb., 1750.

5 In everything satietie closely follows the greatest pleasures. (Omnibus in rebus voluptatibus maximis fastidium finitimum est.)

CICERO, De Oratore. Bk. iii, sec. 25.

But not even pleasure to excess is good:

What most elates then sinks the soul as low.

THOMSON, Castle of Indolence. Canto I, st. 63.

6 And pleasure brings as surely in her train
Remorse, and Sorrow, and vindictive Pain.

COWPER, The Progress of Error, l. 43.

Pleasure admitted in undue degree

Enslaves the will, nor leaves the judgment free.

Pleasure is labour too, and tires as much.

COWPER, Hope, l. 20.

Pleasure, . . .

That reeling goddess with the zoneless waist
And wand'ring eyes, still leaning on the arm
Of Novelty, her sickle frail support.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. iii, l. 51.

7 No pleasure is in itself evil, but the things which produce certain pleasures entail annoyance many times greater than the pleasures themselves.

EPICURUS, Sovran Maxims. No. 8.

8 Fly that present joy,
Which in time will breed annoy.

PLATO, Timæus. Sec. 49 D, n.

Plato happily calls pleasure "the bait of sin," evidently because men are caught therewith like fish. (Divine Plato "escam malorum" appellat voluptatem quod es videlicet homines capiuntur ut pisces.)

CICERO, De Senectute. Ch. xiii, sec. 44.

Pleasure is the greatest incentive to evil.

PLATO. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Life of Cato the Censor).

Pleasure is an inciter to vileness. (Voluptas est illecebra turpitudinis.)

CICERO, De Legibus. Bk. i, ch. 11, sec. 31.

Pleasure's a sin, and sometimes sin's a pleasure.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i, st. 133.

Never pleasure without repentance.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

Short pleasure, long lament.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs. The French form is, "De court plaisir, long repentir."

After drought commyth rayne,

After pleasure commyth payne.

UNKNOWN. (Reliq. Antiquæ, 323.)

All the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail.

JEREMY TAYLOR, Holy Living. Ch. ii, sec. 1.

To think o' the sting that's in the tail of pleasure!

WILLIAM CONGREVE, Old Bachelor: Epilogue.

Pleasure, such as leaves no sting behind!

SAMUEL ROGERS, Human Life, l. 482.

Too oft is transient pleasure the source of endless woe. (Zu oft ist kurze Lust die Quelle langer Schmerzen!)

WIELAND, Oberon. Pt. ii, l. 52.

Sure as night follows day,
Death treads in pleasure's footsteps round the world,

When pleasure treads the paths which reason shuns.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night v, l. 863.

V—Pleasure: Its Transitoriness

The race of delight is short, and pleasures have mutable faces.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Christian Morals. Pt. ii, sec. 1.

But pleasures are like poppies spread:
You seize the flow'r, its bloom is shed;
Or like the snow falls in the river,
A moment white—then melts for ever.

BURNS, Tom o' Shanter, l. 59.

Where is delight? and what are pleasures now?—

Moths that a garment fret.

MARY E. COLLINGS, Mondragora.

'Tis a sight to engage me, if anything can,

To muse on the perishing pleasures of man;
Though his life be a dream, his enjoyments,

I see,

Have a being less durable even than he.

WILLIAM COWPER, The Poplar-Field.

Some pleasures live a month and some a year,
But short the date of all we gather here.

COWPER, Retirement, l. 459.

The shortest pleasures are the sweetest.

FARQUHAR, The Twin Rivals. Act iii, sc. 3.

Play the man.

Look not on pleasures as they come, but go.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church-Porch. St. 72.

The roses of pleasure seldom last long enough to adorn the brow of him who plucks them; for they are the only roses which do not retain their sweetness after they have lost their beauty.

HANNAR MORE, Essays: On Dissipation.

This is a brief and not a true pleasure. (Brevis est hæc, et non vera voluptas.)

OVID, Heroides. Epis. xix, l. 65.

Pleasures are transient, honors are immortal.

PERIANDER. (DIOGENES LAËRTIUS, Periander. Sec. 4.)

Spangling the wave with lights as vain
As pleasures in this vale of pain,
That dazzle as they fade.

VI—Pleasure: The Art of Pleasing

He more had pleased us had he pleased us less.

ADMON, English Poets. Referring to Cowley.

I would rather please one good man than many bad. (Bono probati malo quam multis malis.)

PITTACUS. (AUSONIUS [?], Septem Sapientum Sententiae, l. 9.)

He pleases every one but can not please himself. (Il plaît à tout le monde et ne saurait se plaire.)

BOILEAU, Satires, li. Referring to Molière.

1 Most arts require long study and application; but the most useful of all, that of pleasing, only the desire.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 8 May, 1750.

He makes people pleased with him by first making them pleased with themselves.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 18 Jan., 1750.

Pleasure is necessarily reciprocal; no one feels, who does not at the same time give it. To be pleased one must please.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 9 July, 1750.

The art of pleasing is to seem pleased.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Round Table: On Manner For we that live to please must please to live.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Prologue on the Opening of the Drury Lane Theatre.

Men seldom give pleasure where they are not pleased themselves.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Rambler. No. 74.

They who are pleased themselves must always please.

THOMSON, Castle of Indolence. Canto i, st. 15.

2 Too much desire to please pleasure divorces.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Ovid's Banquet of Sense.

The greatest mistake is the trying to be more agreeable than you can be.

WALTER BACHELOT, Biographical Studies, p. 294.

3 If you mean to profit, learn to please.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, Gotham. Bk. ii, l. 88.

4 Who pleases one against his will.

CONGREVE, The Way of the World: Epilogue.

5 Thus always teasing others, always teas'd,
His only pleasure is—to be displeas'd.

COWPER, Conversation, l. 345.

6 Whate'er he did was done with so much ease,
In him alone, 'twas natural to please.

DRYDEN, Abraham and Achitophel. Pt. i, l. 27.

Whoever would be pleased and please,
Must do what others do with ease.

ROBERT NUZENT, Epistle to a Lady.

7 He must rise early, yea, not at all go to bed, who will have every one's good word.

THOMAS FULLER, Holy War. Bk. iv, ch. 14. (1639)

He had need rise betimes that would please everybody.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 132. (1670) The French form is, "Qui veut plaire à tout le monde doit se lever de bonne heure."

He that all men will please shall never find ease.

JOHN CLARKE, Paræmiologia, 282. (1639)

He that would please all and himself too,

Undertakes what he cannot do.

JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs, 5. (1670)

Who seeks to please all men each way,
And not himself offend,
He may begin his work to-day,
But God knows where he'll end.
SAMUEL ROWLANDS, Epigrams.

8 He is very foolish who aims at pleasing all the world and his father. (Est bien fou du cerveau qui prétend contenter tout le monde et son père.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables. Bk. iii, fab. 1.

9 He pleased you by not studying to please.

GEORGE LYTTLETON, Progress of Love. Pt. III.

10 The man who gives pleasure is as charitable as he who relieves suffering.

GEORGE MOORE, Impressions and Opinions: Dramatists and Their Literature.

11 By whatever gifts you can please, please.
(Quacunque potes date placere, place.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. i, l. 596.

You alone please me. (Tu mihi sola places.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. i, l. 42.

12 Do not care how many, but whom, you please.
(Non quam multis placeas, sed qualibus stude.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententie.

Satisfy a few; to please many is bad. (Mach' es Wenigen recht; vielen gefallen ist schlimm.)

SCHILLER, Votivtafel.

13 I do not exist to please you. (Non tibi spiro.)

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Arcadia. Motto on title-page.

Be you plæ or god, I am marjoram, and do not breathe for you. (Sis sus, sis divus, sum caltha, et non tibi spiro.)

COLERIDGE, Aids to Reflection. Vol. i, p. 13.

14 In great affairs, it is difficult to please all.
(Ἐν μεγάλαις πράσι ἀπὸς πάντων.)

SOLON. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Solon. Sec. 25.)

15 For not even Jove can please all, whether he rains or does not rain. (Οὐδὲ γὰρ ὁ Ζεὺς ὅσῃ βούλῃ ἀρέσκει πάντας ἀνθρώπων.)

THEOPHIS, Elegies. No. 26.

VII—Pleasure: The Man of Pleasure

16 A man of pleasure, in the vulgar acceptation of that phrase, means only a beastly drunkard, an abandoned whoremaster, and a profligate swearer and curser.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 27 March, 1747.

The true pleasures of a gentleman are those of the table, but within the bound of moderation; good company, that is to say, people of merit; moderate play, which amuses, without any interested views; and sprightly gallant conversations with women of fashion and sense.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 26 Feb., 1747.

No man takes pleasures truly who does not earn them by previous business; and few people do business well who do nothing else.

CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 7 Aug., 1749.

I know a great many men, who call themselves men of pleasure, but who, in truth, have none.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 5 Feb., 1750.

No blinder bigot, I maintain it still,
Than he who must have pleasure, come what will.

COWPER, Hope, l. 594.

Who cannot live on twenty pound a year,
Cannot on forty: he's a man of pleasure,
A kind of thing that's for itself too dear.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church-Porch. St. 30.

A life of pleasure requires an aristocratic setting to make it interesting.

GEORGE SANTAYANA, Life of Reason. Vol. ii, 135.

A man devoted to pleasure. (Homo voluptati obsequens.)

TERENCE, Hecyra, l. 459. (Act III, sc. 5.)

POE, EDGAR ALLAN

Ab, much he suffered in his day:
He knelt with Virtue, kissed with Sin—
Wild Passion's child, and Sorrow's twin,
A meteor that had lost its way!

He walked with goblins, ghouls, and things
Unightly,—terrors and despairs;
And ever in the starry airs
A dismal raven flapped its wings!

THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, A Poet's Grave.

I've an idea that if Poe had been an exemplary, conventional, tax-oppressed citizen, like Longfellow, his few poems, as striking as they are, would not have made so great a stir.

ALDRICH, Letter to Stedman, 15 Nov., 1900.

Proud, mad, but not defiant,
He touched at heaven and hell.
Fate found a rare soul pliant
And rung her changes well.

Alternately his lyre,
Stranded with strings of fire,
Led earth's most happy choir,
Or flashed with Israfel.

J. H. BONE, Poe's Cottage at Fordham.

You mean the jingle-man!

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, referring to Edgar Allan Poe. (HOWELLS, Literary Friends and Acquaintances, p. 63.)

There comes Poe, with his raven, like Barnaby Rudge,

Three fifths of him genius and two fifths sheer fudge.

J. R. LOWELL, A Fable for Critics, l. 1297.

O raven death that shrouds your luminous head!

Not you, but your biographers are dead.

JOHN MACY, Couplets in Criticism: Poe.

The sad great gifts the austere Muses bring
In their stern hands to make their poets of
Were laid on him that he might wildly sing
Of Beauty, Death and Love.

EDWIN MARKHAM, Our Israfel.

Weird wraiths companioned him, but none the less,
Amid the forms of ghoul and ghost and gnome,
Figures were wont to roam
Of light and loveliness.

CLINTON SCOLLARD, At the Grave of Poe.

He walked with shadows, and yet who shall say
We are not all as shadows, we who fare
Toward one dim bourn along life's fateful way,
Sharing the griefs and joys once his to share.

CLINTON SCOLLARD, At the Grave of Poe.

If Poe from Pike The Raven stole,
As his accusers say,

Then to embody Adam's soul,
God plagiarized the clay.

JOHN B. TABB, Plagiarism.

A certain tyrant, to disgrace
The more a rebel's resting place,
Compelled the people every one
To hurl, in passing there, a stone,
Which done, behold, the pile became
A monument to keep the name.
And thus it is with Edgar Poe;
Each passing critic has his throw,
Nor sees, defeating his intent,
How lofty grows the monument.

JOHN B. TABB, Poe's Critics.

I.—Poetry: Definitions

Poetry is simply the most beautiful, impressive, and widely effective mode of saying things, and hence its importance.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Essays in Criticism: Heine.

The eternal objects of poetry, among all nations, and at all times, are actions; human actions; possessing an inherent interest in themselves, and which are to be communicated in an interesting manner by the art of the poet.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Sokrab and Rustum: Preface.

Poetry is devil's wine. (Poesis est vinum dæmonum.)

ST. AUGUSTINE, Contra Academicos. Sec. 1.

Did not one of the fathers in great indignation call poetry, vinum dæmonum?

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. II.

1 It [poetry] was ever thought to have some participation of divineness, because it doth raise and erect the mind.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. ii.

Poetry is itself a thing of God; He made His prophets poets; and the more we feel of poetic do we become Like God in love and power.

P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Poem, l. 5.

God Himself is the best Poet, And the Real is His song.

E. B. BROWNING, The Dead Pan. St. 36.

Poetry, the language of the gods.

SAMUEL ROGERS, Italy.

2 Poetry, not finding the actual world exactly conformed to its idea of good and fair, seeks to accommodate the shows of things to the desires of the mind, and to create an ideal world better than the world of experience.

FRANCIS BACON, paraphrasing Aristotle. (EMERSON, Natural History of Intellect: Milton.)

3 Poetry should be vital—either stirring our blood by its divine movements, or snatching our breath by its divine perfection. To do both is supreme glory, to do either is enduring fame.

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Obiter Dicta: Ser. i, Browning's Poetry.

4 Poetry and religion are a product of the smaller intestines.

DR. CABANIS. (CARLYLE, Signs of the Times.)

5 There is no heroic poem in the world but is at bottom a biography, the life of a man; also it may be said, there is no life of a man, faithfully recorded, but is a heroic poem of its sort, rhymed or unrhymed.

CARLYLE, Essays: Memoirs of Scott.

The finest poetry was first experience.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Shakespeare.

6 Poetry which has been defined as the harmonious union of man with nature.

CARLYLE, Essays: Early German Literature.

Poetry, therefore, we will call musical Thought. The Poet is he who thinks in that manner.

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero-Worship: The Hero as Poet.

Giving a name, indeed, is a poetic art; all poetry, if we go to that with it, is but a giving of names.

CARLYLE, Journal, 18 May, 1832.

7 Poetry, the eldest sister of all art, and parent of most.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, The Way of the World: Dedication.

Poetry, the queen of arts.

THOMAS SPAT, Ode upon the Poems of Abraham Cowley.

Poetry is an art, and chief of the fine arts; the easiest to dabble in, the hardest in which to reach true excellence.

E. C. STEEDMAN, Victorian Poets. Ch. 5.

8 Poems come like boats With sails for wings; Crossing the sky swiftly They slip under tall bridges Of cloud.

HILDA CONKLING, Poems.

9 Good poetry could not have been otherwise written than it is. The first time you hear it, it sounds rather as if copied out of some invisible tablet in the Eternal mind, than as if arbitrarily composed by the poet. The feeling of all great poets has accorded with this. They found the verse, not made it. The muse brought it to them.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Art.

10 It does not need that a poem should be long. Every word was once a poem.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

Every poem should be made up of lines that are poems.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. vii. p. 523.

Finally, most of us [imagist poets] believe that concentration is the very essence of poetry.

AMY LOWELL, Imagist Poetry.

11 Only that is poetry which cleanses and mans me.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Inspiration.

Poetry is faith. To the poet the world is virgin soil; all is practicable; the men are ready for virtue; it is always time to do right. . . The test of the poet is the power to take the passing day and hold it up to a divine reason.

. . . Poetry is the consolation of mortal men.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Poetry and Imagination.

Poetry is the only verity—the expression of a sound mind speaking after the ideal, not after the apparent.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Poetry and Imagination.

Poetry must be as new as foam and as old as the rock.

EMERSON, Journals.

12 Words are rather the drowsy part of poetry; imagination the life of it.

OWEN FELTHAM, Resolves: Poets and Poetry.

13 Poems, the hop-grounds of the brain.

MATTHEW GREEN, The Spleen, l. 506.

14 Poetry is to philosophy what the Sabbath is to the rest of the week.

J. C. AND A. W. HARE, Guesses at Truth.

Science sees signs; Poetry the things themselves.

J. C. AND A. W. HARE, Guesses at Truth.

1 I am the reality of things that seem;
The great transmuter, melting loss to gain.
ELLA HEATH, Poetry.

2 It is not enough for poems to have beauty;
they must have charm, and lead the hearer's soul where they will. (Non satis est pulchra eae poemata; dulcio sunt Et quocumque volent animum auditoris agunt.)
HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 99.

A poem is like a picture: one strikes your fancy more, the nearer you stand; another, the farther away. . . . This pleased but once; that, though ten times called for, will always please.
(Ut pictura poesis: erit quæ, si propius stes. Te capiat maxime, et quendam, al longius abstes.
. . . Hæc placuit semel, hæc deciens repetita placebit.)

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 351.

3 The question is whether a noble song is produced by nature or by art. I neither believe in mere labor being of avail without a rich vein of talent, nor in natural cleverness which is not educated. (Natura fieret laudabile carmen an arte, Quæsitum est: ego nec studium sine divite vena, Nec rude quid prosit video ingenium.)

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 408.

'Tis not sufficient to combine
Well-chosen words in a well-ordered line.
(Non satis est puris versum peracribere verbis.)
HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 4, l. 54.

4 Poetry is the bill and coo of sex.
ELBERT HUBBARD, Epigrams

5 The essence of poetry is invention; such invention as, by producing something unexpected, surprises and delights.
SAMUEL JOHNSON, English Poets: Waller.

6 All good verses are like impromptus made at leisure. (Tous les vers excellents sont comme des impromptus faits à loisir.)

7 A drainless shower
Of light is Poesy: 'tis the supreme of power;
'Tis might half slumb'ring on its own right arm.

KEATS, Sleep and Poetry, l. 237.

Poetry should surprise by a fine excess, and not by singularity.

KEATS, Letter to John Taylor, 27 Feb., 1818.

8 Poetry, native and true poetry, is nothing else than each poet's innermost feeling issuing in rhythmic language.

JOHN KEBLE, Lectures on Poetry. No. 22.

The true poem is the poet's mind.
— Excerpt from Poets, First Series: Of History.

9 The essence of all poetry is to be found, not in high-wrought subtlety of thought, nor in pointed cleverness of phrase, but in the depths of the heart and the most sacred feelings of the men who write.

JOHN KEBLE, Lectures on Poetry. No. 28.

Let us therefore deem the glorious art of Poetry
a kind of medicine divinely bestowed upon man.
JOHN KEBLE, Lectures on Poetry: Dedication.

10 A poem should not mean But be.
ARCHIBALD MACLEISH, Ars Poetica.

11 Poetry is a comforting piece of fiction set to more or less lascivious music.

H. L. MENCKEN, Prejudices. Ser. iii, p. 150.

12 The pearl is a disease of the oyster.

A poem is a disease of the spirit

Caused by the irritation

Of a granule of Truth

Fallen into that soft gray bivalve

We call the mind.

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, Bivalves.

13 I would define, in brief, the Poetry of words as the Rhythmical Creation of Beauty. Its sole arbiter is Taste.

EDGAR ALLAN POE, The Poetic Principle.

Poetry is a criticism of life in terms of beauty.
MRS. GEORGE PIERCE, (Forum, Aug., 1928.)

14 Poetry is a language that tells us, through a more or less emotional reaction, something that cannot be said

E. A. ROBINSON, Newspaper Interview.

15 I should define poetry as the exquisite expression of exquisite impressions.

JOSEPH ROUX, Meditations of a Parish Priest.
Pt. i, No. 3.

Poetry is truth in its Sunday clothes.

JOSEPH ROUX, Meditations of a Parish Priest.

16 Poetry is the journal of a sea animal living on land, wanting to fly in the air. Poetry is a search for syllables to shoot at the barriers of the unknown and the unknowable. Poetry is a phantom script telling how rainbows are made and why they go away.

CARL SANDBURG, Poetry Considered. (Atlantic Monthly, March, 1923.)

Poetry is the achievement of the synthesis of hyacinths and biscuits.

² Poetry is the natural language of all worship.
MADAME DE STAËL, Germany. Pt. II, ch. 10.

³ Poetry implies the whole truth, philosophy expresses a particle of it.
H. D. THOREAU, Journal, 26 June, 1852.

Poetry is nothing but healthy speech.
H. D. THOREAU, Journal, 4 Sept., 1841.

⁴ Whatever may have been the case in years gone by, the true use for the imaginative faculty of modern times is to give ultimate vivification to facts, to science, and to common lives, endowing them with the glows and glories and final illustriousness which belong to every real thing, and to real things only. Without that ultimate vivification—which the poet or other artist alone can give—reality would seem incomplete, and science, democracy, and life itself, finally in vain.

WALT WHITMAN, A Backward Glance O'er Travel'd Roads.

The messages of great poems to each man and woman are, Come to us on equal terms, only then can you understand us. We are no better than you, what we inclose you inclose, what we enjoy you may enjoy.

WALT WHITMAN, Leaves of Grass: Preface.

⁵ Poetry is the spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings; it takes its origin from emotion recollected in tranquillity.

III—Poetry: Rhyme and Reason

1 Still may syllables jar with time,
Still may reason war with rhyme,
Resting never!

BEN JONSON, A Fit of Rhyme Against Rhyme.

Here is rhyme, not empty of reason.

BEN JONSON, Volpone: Prologue.

2 Yea, marry, now it is somewhat, for now it is rhyme, whereas before it was neither rhyme nor reason.

SIR THOMAS MORE, to a friend who had thereafter by other writers.

4 Rhyme yet out of reason.

JOHN SKELTON, Against Garneshe No. iii,
l. 128. (c. 1520)

5 I was promised on a time
To have reason for my rhyme;
From that time unto this season,
I received not rhyme nor reason.

EDMUND SPENSER, Lines on His Promised Pension. An apocryphal story relates that in 1590 Queen Elizabeth ordered Lord Burghley, the Lord Treasurer, to pay Spenser a hundred pounds, and when he objected to the amount, she said, "Then give him what is reason." Whereupon Burghley let the matter rest altogether, until the poet, by a rhymed appeal to his sovereign, secured the hundred pounds. It is certain that, in February, 1591, he did secure a pension of fifty pounds.

IV—Poetry: Its Power and Beauty

6 Gold, glory, greed! I loved you not for long;
Wine, women, war! seductive, but not strong;
One passion lasts—the deathless lust of Song.

EDMUND VANCE COOKE, *From the Book of 7 And the shamed listeners knew the spell

That still enchants the years,
When the world's commonplaces fell
In music on their ears.

JOHN DAVIDSON, A Ballad of a Poet Born.

8 To ransom one lost moment with a rhyme,
Or, if fate cries and grudging gods demur,
To clutch Life's hair, and thrust one naked phrase

Like a lean knife between the ribs of Time.

ALFRED BRUCE DOUGLAS, The City of the Soul.

9 Olympian bards who sung
Divine ideas below,
Which always find us young,
And always keep us so.
RALPH WALDO EMERSON, The Poet.

Blake, Homer, Job, and you,
Have made old wine-skins new.
Your energies have wrought
Stout continents of thought.

MARIANNE MOORE, *That Harp You Play So
Well*.

10 God sent his Singers upon earth
With songs of sadness and of mirth,
That they might touch the hearts of men,
And bring them back to heaven again.

LONGFELLOW, The Singers.

11 Never did Poesy appear
So full of heaven to me, as when I saw how it would pierce through pride and fear
To the lives of coarsest men.

LOWELL, Incident in a Railroad Car. St. 18.

Gently touching with the charm of poetry.
(Musæo contigens cuncta lepore.)

LUCRETIVUS, De Rerum Natura. Bk. iv, sec. 9.

12 We hold that the most wonderful and splendid proof of genius is a great poem produced in a civilized age.

MACAULAY, Essays: On Milton.

13 Let the crowd delight in worthless things;
for me may golden-haired Apollo minister full cups from the Castalian spring.
(Vilia miretur vulgus; mihi flavus Apollo Pocula Castalia plena ministret aqua.)

OVID, Amores. Bk. i, eleg. 15, l. 35. This couplet was used as the motto on the title page of Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis.

Great poets need no gentle reader; they hold him captive, however unwilling or hard to please.
(Non opus est magnis placido tectore poetis;
Quamlibet invitum difficilemque tenent.)

OVID, Epistula ex Ponto. Bk. iii, epis. 4, l. 9.

Thanks, Muse, to thee; for thou dost lend me comfort, thou dost come as rest, as balm, to my sorrow. Thou art guide and comrade both.
(Gratia, Musa, tibi: nam tu solacia præbes
Tu curæ requies, tu medicina venis.
Tu dux et comes est.)

OVID, Tristia. Bk. iv, eleg. 10, l. 117.

14 Drive my dead thoughts over the universe,
Like withered leaves, to quicken a new birth;
And, by the incarnation of this verse,
Scatter, as from an unextinguished hearth
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!
Be through my lips to unawakened Earth
The trumpet of a prophecy!

SHELLEY, Ode to the West Wind. Sec. 5.

1 A poem round and perfect as a star.
ALEXANDER SMITH, A Life Drama. Sc. 2.

2 Yea, is not even Apollo, with hair and harp-string of gold,
A bitter God to follow, a beautiful God to behold?

SWINBURNE, Hymn to Proserpine, l. 7.

3 Your lay, heavenly bard, is to me even as sleep on the grass to the weary, as in summer heat the slaking of thirst in a dancing rill of sweet water.

(Tale tuum carmen nobis, divine poeta,
Quale sopor fessis in gramine, quale per æstum
Dulcis aque saliente sitim restinguere rivo.)
VERGIL, Eclogues. No. v, l. 45.

V—Poetry and Immortality

4 No slightest golden rhyme he wrote
That held not something men must quote;
Thus by design or chance did he
Drop anchors to posterity.

T. B. ALDRICH, A Hint from Herrick.

Only write a dozen lines, and rest on your oars forever.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. vii, p. 539.

I would rather risk for future fame upon one lyric than upon ten volumes.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

One simile that solitary shines
In the dry Desert of a thousand lines,
Or lengthen'd thought, that gleams thro' many a page,

Has sanctified whole poems for an age.

PORZ, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. B, epis. i, l. 111.

5 Sappho survives, because we sing her songs;
And Æschylus, because we read his plays!

ROBERT BROWNING, Cleon.

6 Poets alone are sure of immortality; they are the truest diviners of nature.

BULWER-LYTON, Cantonians. Essay 27.

7 Like him I strive in hope my rhymes
May keep my name a little while,—

O child, who knows how many times
We two have made the angels smile!
WILLIAM CANTON, A New Poet.

8 Poets by Death are conquer'd but the wit
Of poets triumphs over it.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, The Praise of Poetry. Ode i, l. 13.

9 Even the gods must go;
Only the lofty Rhyme
Not countless years o'erthrow,—
Not long array of time.
AUSTEN DOBSON, Arx Victoria.

10 His instant thought the poet spoke,
And filled the age his fame;
An inch of ground the lightning strook
But lit the sky with flame.

EMERSON, The Poet.

11 Let no one honor me with tears, nor bury me with lamentation. Why? Because I fly from lip to lip, living in the mouths of men.

(Nemo me lacrymis decoret nec funera fletu Faxit. Cur? volito vivus per ora virum.)

ENNIUS, Part of his epitaph. (CICERO, Tusculan-arum Disputationum. Bk. i, ch. 15, sec. 34.)

I have reared a monument more enduring than bronze and loftier than the royal pyramids, one that no wasting rain, no unavailing north wind can destroy; no, not even the unending years nor the flight of time itself. I shall not wholly die. The greater part of me shall escape oblivion.
(Exegi monumentum ære perennius Regalique situ pyramidum altius; Quod non imber edax, non Aquilæ impotens Possit diruere aut innumerabilis Annorum series et fuga temporum. Non omnis moriar, multaque pars mei Vitabit Libitinam.)
HORACE, Odes. Bk. iii, ode 30, l. 1.

I've reared a monument alone
More durable than brass or stone;
Whose cloudy summit is more hid
Than regal height of pyramid.

HORACE, Odes, iii, 30, l. (Coles, tr.)

Now have I finished a work which neither the wrath of Jove, nor fire, nor steel, nor all-consuming time can destroy. Welcome the day which can destroy only my body in ending my uncertain life. In my better part I shall be raised to immortality above the lofty stars, and my name shall never die.

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. xv, l. 871.

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. iv.

12 Homer's harp is broken and Horace's lyre is unstrung, and the voices of the great singers are hushed; but their songs—their songs are immortal. O friend! what moots it to them or to us who gave this epic or that lyric to immortality? The singer belongs to a year, his song to all time.

EUGENE FIELD, Love Affairs of a Bibliomaniac,
p. 99.

What difference does it make who spoke the words? They were uttered for the world. (Quid interest quis dixerit? Omnibus dixit.)

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucilius. Epis. xiv, 18.

Only to Beauty Time belongs;
Men may perish, But not their songs.

LOUIS GINSBERG, Only to Beauty.

13 Singing and rejoicing,
As aye since time began,
The dying earth's last poet
Shall be the earth's last man.

ANASTASIOS GRUB, The Last Poet.

¹ Thou shalt not all die; for while Love's fire shines

Upon his altar, men shall read thy lines.

ROBERT HEARNE, Upon Himself.

² In his own verse the poet still we find,
In his own page his memory lives enshrined,
As in their amber sweets the smothered bees,—

As the fair cedar, fallen before the breeze,
Lies self-embalmed amidst the mouldering trees.

O. W. HOLMES, Bryant's Seventieth Birthday.

³ Where go the poet's lines?—
Answer, ye evening tapers!

Ye auburn locks, ye golden curls,

Speak from your folded papers!

O. W. HOLMES, The Poet's Lot.

⁴ Still breathes the love, still glows the ardor imparted to the lyre by the Æolian girl.
(Spirat adhuc amor, Vivuntque commissi calores Æoliæ fidibus puellæ.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iv, ode 9, l. 10. Referring to Sappho.

The poet remains, dismember him as you will.
(Invenias etiam disiecta membra poetæ.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 4, l. 62.

⁵ Little snatch of ancient song,
What has made thee live so long?
Flying on thy wings of rhyme
Lightly down the depths of time.

W. E. H. LECKY, On an Old Song.

All things perish, and the strongest
Often do not last the longest;
The stately ship is seen no more,
The fragile skiff attains the shore;
And while the great and wise decay,
And all their trophies pass away,
Some sudden thought, some careless rhyme,
Still floats above the wrecks of Time.

W. E. H. LECKY, On an Old Song.

The bards sublime,
Whose distant footsteps echo

Through the corridors of Time.

LONGFELLOW, The Day Is Done.

⁶ Doth it not thrill thee, Poet,
Dead and dust though thou art,
To feel how I press thy singing
Close to my heart?

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, The Passionate Reader to His Poet.

Like the river, swift and clear,
Flows his song through many a heart.

LONGFELLOW, Oliver Basselin, St. 11.

⁷ O ye dead Poets, who are living still Immortal in your verse, though life be fled,
And ye, O living Poets, who are dead
Though ye are living, if neglect can kill,

Tell me if in the darkest hours of ill,
With drops of anguish falling fast and red
From the sharp crown of thorns upon your head,

Ye were not glad your errand to fulfil?

LONGFELLOW, The Poets.

⁸ The Poet is the only potentate;
His sceptre reaches o'er remotest zones;
His thought remembered and his golden tones
Shall, in the ears of nations uncreate,
Roll on for ages and reverberate
When Kings are dust beside forgotten thrones.

LLOYD MIFFLIN, The Sovereigns.

⁹ Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
Married to immortal verse.

MILTON, L'Allegro, l. 136.

Wisdom married to immortal verse.

WORDSWORTH, The Excursion. Bk. vii, l. 536.

¹⁰ Remember me a little then, I pray,
The idle singer of an empty day.

WILLIAM MORRIS, Earthly Paradise: Apology.

¹¹ Gowns will be rent to rags and gems and gold broken to fragments, but the fame which song brings lasts for ever. (Scindentur vestes, gemmæ frangentur et aurum; Carmina quam tribuent, fama perennis erit.)

OVIN, Amores. Bk. i, eleg. 10, l. 61.

Yea, though hard rocks and though the tooth of the enduring ploughshare perish with passing time, song is untouched by death. (Ergo, cum silices, cum dens patientis atrati Depereant ævo, carmina morte carent.)

OVIN, Amores. Bk. i, eleg. 15, l. 31.

The poet's work endures. (Durat opus vatun.)

OVIN, Amores. Bk. iii, eleg. 9, l. 29.

¹² 'Twas he that ranged the words at random flung,
Pierced the fair pearls and them together strung.

PILPAY, Anwar-i Suhaili. (Eastwick, tr.)

Go boldly forth, my simple lay,
Whose accents flow with artless ease,
Like orient pearls at random strung.

HAFIZ, Song. (Sir William Jones, tr.)

These pearls of thought in Persian gulls were bred,
Each softly lucent as a rounded moon;
The diver Omar plucked them from their bed,
FitzGerald strung them on an English thread.

J. R. LOWELL, In a Copy of Omar Khayyâm.

Jewels five-words-long
That on the stretch'd forefinger of all Time
Sparkle for ever.

TENNISON, The Princess. Pt. ii, l. 353.

It came to him in rainbow dreams,
Blent with the wisdom of the sages,
Of spirit and of passion born;
In words as lucent as the morn
He prisoned it, and now it gleams
A jewel shining through the ages.

L. M. MONTGOMERY, The Poet's Thought.

¹ Call it not vain:—they do not err
Who say that when the poet dies
Mute Nature mourns her worshipper,
And celebrates his obsequies.

SCOTT, Lay of the Last Minstrel. Canto v, st. 1.

² I would rather be remembered by a song than by a victory.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamithorp: Men of Letters.

There is no mere earthly immortality that I envy so much as the poet's. If your name is to live at all, it is so much better to have it live in people's hearts than only in their brains!

O. W. HOLMES, The Poet at the Breakfast-Table. Ch. 4.

³ How best to build the imperishable lay.

ROBERT SCUTHEY, Carmen Nuptiale: Proem.

He knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
MILTON, Lycidas, l. 10.

⁴ To have the deep Poetic heart
Is more than all poetic fame.

TENNYSON, The New Timon.

⁵ Empires dissolve and peoples disappear:
Song passes not away.
Captains and conquerors leave a little dust,
And kings a dubious legend of their reign;
The swords of Cæsars, they are less than rust:

The poet doth remain.

WILLIAM WATSON, Lacrimæ Musarum.

VI—Poetry and Fame

⁶ How many, most famous while they lived, are utterly forgotten for want of writers!
(Quam multos clarissimos suis temporibus viros scriptorum inops deleuit obliuio!)

BOETHIUS, Philosophiæ Consolationis. Bk. ii, prosa 7.

⁷ Verse, like the laurel, its immortal meed,
Should be the guerdon of a noble deed.

COWPER, Charity, l. 292.

Oftimes with unseemly verse poets debase noble deeds. (Fere scriptores carmina fædo Splendida facta linunt.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epist. 1, l. 236.

⁸ Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd Muse.

GRAY, Elegy in a Country Church-yard. St. 20.

⁹ 'Tis the Muse forbids the hero worthy of renown to perish; she enthrones him in the heavens. (Dignum laude virum Musa vetat mori: Cælo Musa beata.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iv, ode 8, l. 28.

Song forbids victorious deeds to die.

SCHILLER, The Artists.

¹⁰ Many heroes lived before Agamemnon; but all are overwhelmed in unending night, unwept, unknown, because they lacked a sacred bard.

(Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona
Multi; sed omnes inlacrimabiles
Urgentur ignotique longa
Nocte, carent quia vate sacro.)
HORACE, Odes. Bk. iv, ode 9, st. 7.

Before Atreides men were brave:
But ah! oblivion dark and long
Has locked them in a tearless grave,
For lack of consecrating song.
HORACE, Odes, iv, 9. (Conington, tr.)

Many valiant chiefs of old Greatly lived and died before
Agamemnon, Grecian bold,
Waged the ten years' famous war.
But their names, unsung, unwept,
Unrecorded, lost and gone,
Long in endless night have slept,
And shall now no more be known.
HORACE, Odes, iv, 9. (Swift, tr.)

Brave men were living before Agamemnon
And since, exceeding valorous and sage,
A good deal like him too, but quite the same none;
But then they shone not on the poet's page.
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i, st. 5.

Vain was the Chief's, the Sage's pride!
They had no Poet, and they died.
In vain they schemed, in vain they bled!
They had no Poet, and are dead.
POPE, Imitations of Horace: Odes. Bk. iv, ode 9, l. 13.

They built with bronze and gold and brawn,
The inner Viaion still denied;
Their conquests . . . Ask oblivion! . . .
"They had no poet, and they died."
DON MARQUIS, They Had No Poet.

¹¹ Past ruined Ilion Helen lives,
Alcectis rises from the shades;
Verse calls them forth; 'tis verse that gives Immortal youth to mortal maids.

Soon shall Oblivion's deepening veil
Hide all the peopled hills you see,
The gay, the proud, while lovers hail
These many summers you and me.
W. S. LANDOR, Past Ruined Ilion.

¹² How mighty, how sacred is the poet's task!
He snatches all things from destruction and gives immortality to mortal men.
(O Sacer et magnus vatum labori omnia fata Eripis et populis donas mortalibus ævum.)
LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. ix, l. 980.

¹³ Song makes great deeds immortal, cheats the tomb,
And hands down fame to ages yet to come.

(Carmine fit vivax virtus: expersque sepulcri, Notitiam sętrę posteritatis habet.)
OVID, Epistula ex Ponto. Bk. iv, epla. 8, l. 47.

I'll make thee glorious by my pen
And famous by my sword.

MARQUIS OF MONTROSE, My Dear and Only Love.

I'll make thee famous by my pen
And glorious by my sword.

SCOTT, Legend of Montrose. Ch. 15. An incorrect quotation of Montrose's lines.

'Tis meet for the great to be hymned in fairest song, for every noble deed dieth if suppressed in silence. (Ἡρώων δ' ἐλοίων ὑμνεῖσθαι . . .
καλλίσταις δοῦναι . . . ὁρᾶται δὲ σφραγὶς καλὴν ἔργων.)

PINDAR, Alexandro Anthyia. Frag. 85.

Ascendant Phębus watch'd that hour with care,

Averted half your parents' simple prayer,
And gave you beauty, but denied the pelf
That buys your sex a tyrant o'er itself. . . .
Kept dress for Duchesses, the world shall know it,

To you gave Sense, Good-humour, and a Poet.
POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. ii, l. 285.

When falls the soldier brave,
Dead at the feet of wrong,
The poet sings and guards his grave
With sentinels of song,

ABRAHAM J. RYAN, Sentinel Songs.

Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read,
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall live—such virtue bath my pen—

Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. lxxxi.

Thy lord shall never die, the whiles this verse
Shall live, and surely it shall live for ever:
For ever it shall live, and shall rehearse
His worthy praise, and virtues dying never, Though death his soul do from his body
sever:

And thou thyself herein shalt also live:
Such grace the heavens do to my verses give.
SPENSER, The Ruines of Time, l. 253.

How many great ones may remembered be
Which in their days most famously did flourish,
Of whom no word we hear nor sign we see
But as things wiped out with a sponge do perish

Because they living cared not to cherish
No gentle wits, thro' pride or covetize,
Which might their name forever memorize.

SPENSER, The Ruines of Time, l. 356.

How strange a paradox is true,
That men who lived and died without a name,
Are the chief heroes in the sacred lists of fame.
SWIFT, Ode to the Athenian Society.

Illustrious acts high raptures do infuse,
And every conqueror creates a muse.
EDMUND WALLER, Panegyric on Cromwell.

Yet what he sung in his immortal strain,
Though unsuccessful, was not sung in vain; . . .
Like Phębus thus, acquiring unsought praise,
He caught at love and filled his arm with bays.

EDMUND WALLER, The Story of Phębus and Daphne Applied.

A great deal, my dear liege, depends
On having clever bards for friends.
What had Achilles been without his Homer?
A tailor, woollen-draper, or a comber!
JOHN WOLCOT, A Moral Reflection: To George III.

Small thought was his, in after-time
E'er to be hitched into a rhyme.
SCOTT, Marmion: Canto vi, Introduction.

Shall poesy, like law, turn wrong to right,
And dedications wash an Æthiop white?
YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. i, l. 27.

VII—Poetry and Love

There's many a would-be poet at this hour
Rhymes of a love that he hath never wooed,
And o'er his lamplit desk in solitude
Deems that he sitteth in the Muses' bower.
ROBERT BRIDGES, The Growth of Love. St. 11.

Young men, ay and maids,
Too often sow their wild oats in tame verse.
E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. i, l. 948.

Verse and nothing else have I to give you.
Other heights in other lives, God willing:
All the gifts from all the heights, your own,
Love!

ROBERT BROWNING, One Word More. Sec. 12.

Love thou, and if thy love be deep as mine,
Thou wilt not laugh at poets.
BULWER-LYTTON, Richelieu. Act i, sc. 1, l. 177.

When amatory poets sing their loves
In liquid lines mellifluously bland,
And pair their rhymes as Venus yokes her doves.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto v, st. 1.

Ovid's a rake, as half his verses show him,
Anacreon's morals are a still worse sample,
Catullus scarcely has a decent poem,
I don't think Sappho's Ode a good example,
Although Longinus tells us there is no hymn
Where the sublime soars forth on wings more ample;

But Virgil's songs are pure, except that horrid one
Beginning with "Formosum Pastor Corydon."
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i, st. 42.

1 A Poet without Love were a physical and metaphysical impossibility.

CARLYLE, Essays: Burns.

A poet not in love is out at sea;
He must have a lay-figure.

P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Home.

Test of the poet is knowledge of love,
For Eros is older than Saturn or Jove.

EMERSON, Quatrains: Casella.

2 Oh love will make a dog howl in rhyme.

FLETCHER, Queen of Corinth. Act iv, sc. 1.

3 Poetry has not often been worse employed than in dignifying the amorous fury of a raving girl.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Works. Vol. iv, p. 15.

4 Touchstone: Truly, I would the gods had made thee poetical.

Audrey: I do not know what "poetical" is: is it honest in deed and word? is it a true thing?

Touchstone: No, truly; for the truest poetry is the most feigning; and lovers are given to poetry.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 15.

Never durst poet touch a pen to write
Until his ink were temper'd with Love's sighs.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act iv, sc. 3, l. 346.

5 But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. xxii.

6 Song, made in lieu of many ornaments
With which my love should duly have been deck'd.

EDMUND SPENSER, Epithalamion, l. 427.

7 Had his fingers been able to toy with her hair
Would they then have written the verses fair?

JAMES THOMSON, Art. St. 3.

8 If Thought and Love desert us, from that day
Let us break off all commerce with the Muse.

WORDSWORTH, Poems Suggested During a Tour. No. 48.

VIII—Poetry and Poverty

9 A man should live in a garret aloof,
And have few friends, and go poorly clad,
With an old hat stopping the chink in the roof,
To keep the Goddess constant and glad.

THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, The Flight of the Goddess.

For who sings commonly so merry a note
As he that cannot chop or change a groat?

RICHARD BARNFIELD, The Shepherd's Content. St. 29.

10 Poets evermore are scant of gold.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. v, l. 1199.

11 Poverty is the Muse's patrimony.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. i, sec. 2, mem. 3, subs. 15.

12 It is not poetry that makes men poor,
For few do write that were not so before,
And those that have writ best, had they been rich,

Had ne'er been clapp'd with a poetic itch.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Miscellaneous Thoughts, l. 440.

13 Let such forego the poet's sacred name,
Who rack their brains for lucre, not for fame.
BYRON, English Bards, and Scotch Reviewers, l. 177.

No Muse is proof against a golden shower.

SAMUEL GAYE, Claremont, l. 14.

14 The man who weds the sacred Muse
Disdains all mercenary views.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Ghost. Bk. iii, l. 919.

15 Feel you the barren flattery of a rhyme?
Can poets soothe you, when you pine for bread,

By winding myrtle round your ruin'd shed?

GEORGE CRABBE, The Village. Bk. i.

16 If I'd as much money as I could tell,
I never would cry my songs to sell.

ADELAIDE CRAPSEY, Vendor's Song.

17 The poet is never the poorer for his song.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Works and Days.

18 A Cure for Poetry:—Seven wealthy towns contend for Homer dead,
Through which the living Homer begged his bread.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1739.
Quoting Thomas Seward. See 911:5.

My father discouraged me [from becoming a poet] by ridiculing my performances, and telling me verse-makers were generally beggars.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Autobiography. Ch. 1.

19 And thou, sweet Poetry, thou loveliest maid,
Still first to fly where sensual joys invade; . . .
Thou source of all my bliss and all my woe,
That found'st me poor at first, and keep'st me so.

GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village, l. 407.

Could a man live by it, it were not unpleasant employment to be a poet.

GOLDSMITH, Letter to H. Goldsmith, Feb., 1759.

20 Poets, Being poor,
Must use words with economy.

WILLIAM GRIFFITHS, Laconic.

¹ Poets, henceforth for pensions need not care,
Who call you beggars, you may call them
liars,

Verses are grown such merchantable ware,
That now for Sonnets, sellers are, and buyers.

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, A Comfort for Poor Poets. 1633. (Epigrams. Bk. i, epig. 41.)

In rhyme, fine tinkling rhyme and flowing verse,
With now and then some sense; and he was paid
for it,

Regarded and rewarded; which few poets are nowadays.

BEN JONSON, Masque of the Fortunate Isles.
Alluding to Henry Scogan, tutor to the sons of Henry IV.

² Barefaced poverty drove me to writing verses.
(Paupertas impulit aulax Ut versus facerem.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 2, l. 51.

Indignation leads to the making of poetry.
(Facit indignatio versum.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. i, l. 79.

And poets by their sufferings grow,—

As if there were no more to do,

To make a poet excellent,

But only want and discontent.

SAKUEL BUTLER, Miscellaneous Thoughts. l.
437.

Most wretched men
Are cradled into poetry by wrong;
They learn in suffering what they teach in song.
SHELLEY, Julian and Maddalo, l. 544.

³ Dreaming on nought but idle poetry,
That fruitless and unprofitable art,
Good unto none; but least to the professors.

BEN JONSON, Every Man in His Humour. Act
I, sc. 1.

⁴ You who compose sublime poetry in a cramped attic, that you may come forth worthy of an ivy wreath and an ugly statue.
Beyond this, you have no hope of anything.

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vii, l. 27.
Let such as have not got a passport from nature be content with happiness, and leave to the poet
the unrivalled possession of his misery, his garret, and his fame.

GOLDSMITH, The Poet. (Critical Review, 1759.)

⁵ Poverty! thou source of human art,
Thou great inspirer of the poet's song!

EDWARD MOORE, Hymn to Poverty.

Necessity may be the mother of lucrative invention, but it is the death of poetical.

WILLIAM SHENSTONE, Writing and Books, 63.

⁶ I am the poet of the poor. (Pauperibus vates ego sum.)

WILLIAM GRIFFITH, Demos.

⁸ The bard whom pilfer'd pastorals renown,
Who turns a Persian tale for half-a-crown,
Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
And strains from hard-bound brains eight lines a year.

POPE, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l. 179.

⁹ For ne'er

Was flattery lost on Poet's ear;

A simple race! they waste their toil

For the vain tribute of a smile.

SCOTT, Lay of the Last Minstrel. Can. iv, st. 35.

Friendship, esteem, and fair regard,

And praise, the poet's best reward!

SCOTT, Rokeby. Canto i, st. 27.

¹⁰ Princess, inscribe beneath my name,
"He never begged, he never sighed,
He took his medicine as it came";

For this the poets lived—and died.

J. C. SQUIRE, Ballade of the Poetic Life.

¹¹ And mighty Poets in their misery dead.
WORDSWORTH, Resolution and Independence.
St. 17.

I thought of Chatterton, the marvellous Boy,
The sleepless Soul that perished in his pride;
On Him who walked in glory and in joy
Following his plough, along the mountain-side:
By our own spirits are we defied:
We Poets in our youth begin in gladness;
But thereof come in the end despondency and madness.

WORDSWORTH, Resolution and Independence.
Poetry has never brought in enough to buy shoe-

¹⁴ I think it will be found that the grand style arises in poetry when a noble nature, poeti-cally gifted, treats with simplicity or with severity a serious subject.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Controversy with Professor Newman on the Right Method of Translating Homer.

¹ Time was, ere yet in these degenerate days
Ignoble themes obtain'd ignoble praise,
When sense and wit with poesy allied,
No fabled graces, flourish'd side by side;
From the same fount their inspiration drew,
And, rear'd by taste, bloom'd fairer as they grew.

BYRON, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers,
l. 103.

Yet Truth sometimes will lend her noblest fires,
And decorate the verse herself inspires:
This fact, in Virtue's name, let Crabbe attest;—
Though Nature's sternest painter, yet the best.
BYRON, English Bards, Scotch Reviewers, 855.

² Let the verse the subject fit,
Little subject, little wit.

Namby Pamby is your guide.

HENRY CAREY, Namby-Pamby. (Poems on Several Occasions, p. 55. 1729) A satire on Ambrose Philips, of whose first name "Namby-Pamby" was intended as a diminutive.

And Namby-Pamby he prefer'd for wit.
POPE, The Dunciad. Bk. iii. l. 322. (1729) Also referring to Philips; changed in later editions to "Lo! Ambrose Philips is prefer'd for wit."

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 388.

I sit with sad civility, I read
With honest anguish and an aching head,
And drop at last, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, "Keep your piece nine years."
"Nine years!" cries he, who, high in Drury Lane,
Lull'd by soft zephyrs thro' the broken pane,
Rhymes ere he wakes, and prints before Term ends,

Obliged by hunger and request of friends.

POPE, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l. 37.

⁹ Wheresoe'er I turn my view,
All is strange, yet nothing new:

Endless labour all along,
Endless labour to be wrong:
Phrase that Time has flung away,
Uncouth words in disarray,
Trick'd in antique ruff and bonnet,
Ode, and elegy, and sonnet.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Lines in Imitation of a Well-Known Author. (BOSWELL, Life, 18 Sept. 1777. Croker's note.) A parody of Thomas Warton.

¹⁰ They write a verse as smooth, as soft as cream;

MOLIÈRE, Les Précieuses Ridicules. Sc. 11.

Nothing so difficult as a beginning
In poetry, unless perhaps the end.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto iv, st. 1.

Confined to common life thy numbers flow,
And neither soar too high nor sink too low;
Therestrength and ease in graceful union meet,
Though polished, subtle, and though poignant, sweet;

Yet powerful to abash the front of crime
And crimson error's cheek with sportive rhyme.
(Verba togæ sequebris junctura callidus acris,

Prescribed her heights, and pruned her tender wing.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. iii, l. 176. Referring to Walsby, Pope's early patron.

Poets, like painters, thus unskill'd to trace
The naked nature and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of Art.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. ii, l. 93.

J. ST. LOE STRACHEY, The Postmaster.

Then, rising with Aurora's light,
The Muse invoc'd, sit down to write;
Blot out, correct, insert, refine,
Enlarge, diminish, interline.

SWIFT, On Poetry.

Poets lose half the praise they should have got,
Could it be known what they discreetly blot.

EDMUND WALLER, Upon the Earl of Roscommon's Translation of Horace, l. 41.

For his chaste Muse employed her heaven-taught

None but the noblest passions to inspire,
Not one immoral, one corrupted thought,
One line, which dying he could wish to blot.

GEORGE LYTTLETON, Prologue to Thomson's Coriolanus.

For I will for no man's pleasure
Change a syllable or measure;
Pedants shall not tie my strains
To our antique poets' veins;
Being born as free as these,
I will sing as I shall please.

GEORGE WITHE, The Shepherd's Hunting.

X—Poetry: Rhyme

Rhyme the rudder is of verses,
With which, like ships, they steer their courses.
BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto i, l. 463.

Rhyme is the rock on which thou art to wreck.
DRYDEN, Absalom and Achitophel. Pt. ii, l. 486.

Till barbarous nations, and more barbarous times,
Debased the majesty of verse to rhymes.

DRYDEN, To the Earl of Roscommon, l. 11.

And rhyme began t' enervate Poetry.

DRYDEN, To Sir Godfrey Kneller, l. 50.

And like the canter of the rhymes,
That had a hoofbeat in their sound.

LONGFELLOW, The Wayside Inn: Interlude before The Mother's Ghost.

The troublesome and modern bondage of Rhyming.

MILTON, Paradise Lost: Preface.

Rhyme being no necessary Adjunct or true Ornament of Poem or good Verse, in longer Works especially, but the Invention of a barbarous Age, to set off wretched matter and lame Meter.

MILTON, Paradise Lost: Preface.

So I told them in rhyme,
For of rhymes I had store.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, The Cataract of Lodore.

Thick calf, fat foot, and slim knee,
Mounted on roof and chimney.

HORACE AND JAMES SMITH, Rejected Addresses.

This couplet was introduced "by way of bravado, in answer to one who alleged that the English language contained no rhyme to chimney."

XI—Poetry: Metro

1 And the rolling anapestic

Curled like vapour over shrines!

E. B. BROWNING, Wine of Cyprus, St. 10.

2 The fatal facility of the octosyllabic verse.

BYRON, The Corsair: Preface.

3 Trochæe trips from long to short;
From long to long in solemn sort

Slow Spondæe stalks; strong foot! yet ill able

Ever to come up with dactyl trisyllable.

Iambics march from short to long;—

With a leap and a bound the swift Anapæsts throng;

One syllable long, with one short at each side,

Amphibrachys hastes with a stately stride;—

First and last being long, middle short, Am-phimacer

Strikes his thundering hoofs like a proud high-bred Racer.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Metrical Feet.

4 In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column:

In the pentameter aye falling in melody back.

S. T. COLERIDGE, The Ovidian Elegiac Metro.

Strongly it bears us along in swelling and limitless billows;

Nothing before and nothing behind but the sky and the ocean.

S. T. COLERIDGE, The Homeric Hexameter.

So the Hexameter, rising and singing, with cadence sonorous,

Falls; and in reffluent rhythm back the Pen-tameter flows.

LONOFFLOW, Elegiac Verse.

5 A long syllable following a short is called an Iambus. (Syllaba longa brevi subjecta vocatur Iambus.)

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 251.

The bitter but wholesome Iambic.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Apologie for Poetrie, Pt. II.

6 These equal syllables alone require,

Tho' oft the ear the open vowels tirt,

While expletives their feeble aid do join,

And ten low words oft creep in one dull line.

POPE, Essay on Criticism, Pt. II, l. 144.

XII—Poetry: Poetic Licence

7 Poets and painters, as all artists know,
May shoot a little with a lengthened bow. . . .

But make not monsters spring from gentle dams—

Birds breed not vipers, tigers nurse not lambs.

BYRON, Hints from Horace, l. 15.

8 The freer utterances of the poet's licence.
(Poetarum licentiae liberiora.)

CICERO, De Oratore, Bk. III, ch. 33, sec. 153.

9 A man may be an admirable poet without being an exact chronologer.

DRYDEN, Æneid: Dedication.

Some force whole regions, in despite

O' geography, to change their site;

Make former times shake hands with latter,

And that which was before come after.

But those that write in rhyme still make

The one verse for the other's sake;

For one for sense, and one for rhyme,

I think 's sufficient at one time.

BUTLER, Hudibras, Pt. II, canto I, l. 23.

10 According to that old verse . . . Astronomers, painters and poets may lie by authority.

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Apologie of Poetry, Par.

3, (1591)

Besides, we Poets lie by good authority.

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Epigrams, Bk. II, No. 184.

Poets and painters by authoritie

As well as travelers we say may lie.

ROBERT HEATH, Epigrams, 35.

11 Painters and poets have always had an equal licence to dare anything. (Pictoribus atque poetis Quilibet audendi semper fuit æqua potestas.)

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 9.

This the just right of poets ever was,

And will be still, to coin what words they please.

JOHN OLDHAM, Horace's Art of Poetry Imi- tated.

12 Measureless pours forth the creative licence of poets, nor trammels its utterance with history's truth. (Exit in immensum secunda li-centia vatium, Obligat historica nec sua verba

Good-bye to the fictions of the poets. (Valeant mendacia vatium.)

OVID, Fasti, Bk. vi, l. 253.

13 Using, as his habit is, a poet's licence. (Usus Poete, ut moris est, licentia.)

FRANÇOIS, Fables, Bk. IV, fab. 23, l. 3.

14 Fiction is the privilege of poets. (Tamen poetis mentiri licet.)

PLINY THE YOUNGER, Epistles, Bk. VI, epist. 21.

Odds life! must one swear to the truth of a song?

MATTHEW PRIOR, A Better Answer.

In poetry there is always fallacy, and sometimes fiction.

SCOTT, The Bride of Lammermoor. Ch. 21.

And thought a lie in verse or prose the same;
That not in fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But stoop'd to truth, and moraliz'd his song.

POPE, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l. 339.

Fierce wars and faithful loves shall moralize my song.

SPENSER, Faerie Queene: Introduction. St. 1.

Poetic licence. (Licentia poetica.)

SENECA, Naturales Quaestiones, xlv, 1.

Unjustly poets we asperse:
Truth shines the brighter clad in verse,
And all the fictions they pursue
Do but insinuate what is true.

SWIFT, To Stella.

XIII—Poetry and Verse

I little read those poets who have made
A noble art a pessimistic trade,
And trained their Pegasus to draw a hearse
Through endless avenues of drooping verse.

THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, Pessimistic Poets.

What though, like a lady's waist,
All his lines are overlaced?

UNKNOWN, To Thomas Bailey Aldrich. (Daily Teller, November, 1896.)

Our witty Boston Autocrat, Oliver Wendell Holmes, once playfully declared that Mr. Smith and Mrs. Brown were the two most popular poets in the United States. He had in mind the Reverend Samuel F. Smith, to whom we are indebted for "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and Mrs. Phoebe Hinsdale Brown, who wrote the famous hymn which begins, "I love to steal away awhile from every slumbering care."

C. A. BROWNE, The Story of Our National Ballads.

One fine day,
Says Mister Mucklewraith to me, says he,
"So! you've a poet in your house," and smiled.
"A poet? God forbid," I cried; and then
It all came out: how Andrew slyly sent Verse to the paper; how they printed it
In Poet's Corner.

ROBERT BUCHANAN, Poet Andrew, l. 161.

A quaint farrago of absurd conceits,
Out-babbling Wordsworth and out-glittering Keats.

I too can hunt a poetaster down.

BYRON, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, l. 1064.

Swans sing before they die—'twere no bad thing

Did certain persons die before they sing.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Epigram.

Sir, I admit your general rule,
That every poet is a fool,
But you yourself may serve to show it,
That every fool is not a poet.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Epigram.

Your poem must eternal be,
Dear Sir! it cannot fail!

For 'tis incomprehensible,
And without head or tail.

S. T. COLERIDGE, To the Author of the Ancient Mariner.

Made poetry a mere mechanic art.

COWPER, Table Talk, l. 654.

Doeg, though without knowing how or why,
Made still a blund'ring kind of melody;
Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,

Through sense and nonsense, never out nor in;

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad,
And in one word, heroically mad.

DRYDEN, Abraham and Achitophel. Pt. II, l. 412. "Doeg": Elkanah Settle.

O gracious God! How far have we Profan'd thy Heav'nly gift of Poesy!
Made prostitute and profligate the Muse,
Debas'd to each obscene and impious use,
Whose Harmony was first ordain'd Above,
For Tongues of Angels and for Hymns of Love!
DRYDEN, To the Pious Memory of Mrs. Anne Killigrew. St. 4.

Oh, hapless land of mine! whose country-presses

Labour with poets and with poetesses;
Where Helicon is quaffed like beer at table,
And Pegasus is "hitched" in every stable.

A. J. H. DUQUANNE, Parnassus in Pillory.

Their scallop-shells so many bring
The fabled founts of song to try,
They've drained, for aught I know, the spring
Of Aganippe dry.

WHITTIER, My Namesake. St. 3.

Thy trivial harp will never please
Or fill my craving ear;
Its chords should ring as blows the breeze,
Free, peremptory, clear. . . .

The kingly bard
Must smite the chords rudely and hard,
As with hammer or with mace.

EMERSON, Martin.

His verses run with a halting foot. (Incomposito pede currere versus.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 10, l. 9.

The line, too, labours, and the words move slow.
POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. ii, l. 171.

This is the very false gallop of verses.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 119.

Great noble wits, be good unto yourselves,
And make a difference 'twixt poetic elves
And poets: all that dabble in the ink
And defile quills are not those few can think.

The zeal of fools offends at any time,
But most of all the zeal of fools in rhyme.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 1, l. 406.

And that would set my teeth nothing on edge
Nothing so much as mincing poetry:
'Tis like the forced gait of a shuffling nag.

SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 133.

A flawless cup: how delicate and fine
The flowing curve of every jewelled line!
Look, turn it up or down, 'tis perfect still,—
But holds no drop of life's heart-warming wine.

HENRY VAN DYKE, The Empty Quatrain.

There have been many most excellent poets that never versified, and now swarm many versifiers that need never answer to the name of poets.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Apologie for Poetrie. Pt. ii.

One may be a poet without versing, and a versifier without poetry.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. v, l. 679.

For all those pretty knocks you compose,
Alas, what are they but poems in prose?

SIR JOHN DENHAM, To the Five Members of the Hon. House of Commons, l. 41.

I wish our clever young poets would remember my homely definitions of prose and poetry; that is, prose,—words in their best order; poetry,—the best words in their best order.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Table Talk, 12 July, 1827.

Poetry has done enough when it charms, but prose must also convince.

H. L. MENCKEN, Prejudices. Ser. iii, p. 166.

A kind of hobbling prose,
That limped along, and tinkled in the close.
DRYDEN, To the Earl of Roscommon, l. 13.

Our poetry in the eighteenth century was prose; our prose in the seventeenth, poetry.

J. C. AND A. W. HARE, Guesses at Truth.

Truth is enough for prose:
Calmly it goes
To tell just what it knows.

For verse, skill will suffice—
Delicate, nice
Casting of verbal dice.

Poetry, men attain
By subtler pain
More flagrant in the brain—

An honesty unfeigned,
A heart unchained,
A madness well restrained.

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, At the Mermaid Cafeteria.

And he whose fustian 's so sublimely bad,
It is not poetry, but prose run mad.

POPE, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l. 187.

Who says in verse what others say in prose.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 1, l. 202.

One merit of poetry few persons will deny: it says more and in fewer words than prose.

POETS

I—Poets: Definitions

- ¹¹ Poets are all who love, who feel great truths, And tell them.
P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Another and a Better World.
- Many are poets who have never penn'd
Their inspiration, and perchance the best: . . .
Many are poets but without the name,
For what is poesy but to create
From overfeeling good or ill; and aim
At an external life beyond our fate?
BYRON, The Prophecy of Dante. Canto iv, l. 1.

Death to themselves, but to their foes but smart.
GEORGE CRABBE, The Newspaper, l. 11.
- ¹⁷ A poet is the painter of the soul.
ISAAC D'ISRAELI, Literary Character. Ch. 20.
- The poet must be alike polished by an intercourse with the world as with the studies of taste; one to whom labour is negligence, refinement a science, and art a nature.
ISAAC D'ISRAELI, Literary Character of Men of Genius: Vers de Société.
- ¹⁸ Poets should be law-givers; that is, the boldest lyric inspiration should not chide and insult, but should announce and lead the civil code, and the day's work.
EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Of Prudence.
- The sign and credentials of the poet are that he announces that which no man has foretold.
EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

1 What are our poets, take them as they fall,
Good, bad, rich, poor, much read, not read at all?

Them and their works in the same class you'll find—

They are the mere wastepaper of mankind.
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Paper.

2 The poet is the truest historian.
JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, Homer.

We call those poets who are first to mark Through earth's dull mist the coming of the dawn,—

Who see in twilight's gloom the first pale spark,
While others only note that day is gone.

O. W. HOLMES, Memorial Verses: Shakespeare.
Poets, the first instructors of mankind.

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 449. (Dillon, tr.)

The true poet is all-knowing! he is an actual world in miniature.

NOVALIS, Fragment. (Carlyle, tr.)

3 A poet is that which by the Greeks is called καὶ ποιητής, ὁ ποιητής, a maker, or a feigner:
... from the word ποιεῖν, which signifies to make, or feign. Hence he is called a poet.

BEN JONSON, Explorata: Poeta.

4 If men will impartially, and not asquint, look toward the offices and function of a poet, they will easily conclude to themselves the impossibility of any man's being the good poet without first being a good man.

BEN JONSON, Volpone: Dedication.

A poet's soul must contain the perfect shape of all things good, wise and just. His body must be spotless and without blemish, his life pure, his thoughts high, his studies intense.

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Obituary Dicta: Second Series: Milton.

5 They shall be accounted poet kings
Who simply tell the most heart-easing things.
JOHN KEATS, Sleep and Poetry, l. 267.

6 Nothing is more certain than that great poets are no sudden prodigies but slow results.

J. R. LOWELL, My Study Windows: Chaucer.

7 He who would not be frustrate of his hope to write well hereafter in laudable things ought himself to be a true poem.

MILTON, Apology for Smectymnus.

He who would write heroic poems should make his whole life a heroic poem.

CARLYLE, Essays: Schiller.

8 A poet is a nightingale who sits in darkness and sings to cheer its own solitude with sweet sounds.

SHELLEY, A Defence of Poetry.

Poets are the hierophants of an unapprehended inspiration; the mirrors of the gigantic shadows which futurity casts upon the present.

SHELLEY, A Defence of Poetry.

9 The tadpole poet will never grow into anything bigger than a frog; not though in that stage of development he should puff and blow himself till he bursts with windy adulation at the heels of the laureled ox.

SWINBURNE, Under the Microscope.

(Μουσάρων ἀπαύρων ὑπάκοος.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Birds, l. 909.

11 They all are off their native heath—
Shake, Mulleary and Go-ethe.

H. C. BUNNER, Shake, Mulleary and Go-ethe.

12 When people say, "I've told you fifty times,"
They mean to scold, and very often do;
When poets say, "I've written fifty rhymes,"

They make you dread that they'll recite them too.

BYRON, Don Juan, Canto 4, st. 108.

13 Spare the poet for his subject's sake.
COWPER, Charity, l. 636.

They best can judge a poet's worth,
Who oft themselves have known

The pangs of a poetic birth
By labours of their own.

COWPER, To Dr. Darwin, St. 2.

Poets! not in Arabia alone

You get beheaded when your skill is gone.

THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, The World's Way.

14 Idleness, that is the curse of other men, is the nurse of poets.

D'ARCY CRESSWELL, The Poet's Progress.

15 All men are poets at heart.

EMERSON, *Nature, Addresses, and Lectures:
Literary Ethics*.

Every man will be a poet if he can; otherwise a philosopher or man of science. This proves the superiority of the poet.

H. D. THOREAU, Journal, 11 April, 1852.

16 The experience of each new age requires a new confession, and the world seems always waiting for its poet.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: the Poet.

17 The poet's business is not to save the soul of man but to make it worth saving.

JAMES ELROY FLECKNER, (UNTERMYER, Modern British Poetry, p. 533.)

18 Those who err follow the poets.

The Koran. Ch. 26. The Oriental belief is that poets are prompted by devils with such scraps of angels' converse as they can hear by stealth.

¹ Next to being a great poet, is the power of understanding one.

LONGFELLOW, Hyperion. Bk. ii, ch. 3.

² He is upbraidingly called a Poet, as if it were a most contemptible nickname.

BEN JONSON, Explorata: Jam Litera Sordens.

Slight not the songsmith.

WILLIAM WATSON, England My Mother. Pt. i.

³ He does not write whose verses no one reads. (Non scribit, cujus carmina nemo legit.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. iii, ep. 9, l. 2.

Enthusiast, go, unstring the lyre;

In vain thou sing'st if none admire,

How sweet so'er the strain.

WILLIAM WHITEHEAD, The Enthusiast.

⁴ God's most candid critics are those of his children whom he has made poets.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH THE YOUNGER, Oxford Poetry, 1914: Preface.

⁵ The poet who does not revere his art, and believe in its sovereignty, is not born to wear the purple.

E. C. STEDMAN, Poets of America. Ch. 9.

⁶ For pointed satire I would Buckhurst choose, The best good man with the worst-natured muse.

JOHN WILMOT, EARL OF ROCHESTER, An allusion to Horace, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 10, l. 64.

Thou best humour'd man with the worst humour'd muse.

GOLDSMITH, Retaliation; Postscript, last line. Quoted. Referring to Caleb Whitefoord.

But you're our partic'lar author, you're our patriot and our friend,

You're the poet of the cuss-word an' the swear. EDGAR WALLACE, Tommy to his Laureate. Referring to Rudyard Kipling.

III—Poets: Born, Not Made

⁷ Sure there are poets which did never dream Upon Parnassus, nor did taste the stream Of Helicon; we therefore may suppose Those made not poets, but the poets those.

SIR JOHN DENHAM, Cooper's Hill.

⁸ Each year new consuls and proconsuls are made; but not every year is a king or a poet born. (Consules fiunt quotannis et novi proconsules: Solus aut rex aut poeta non quotannis nascitur.)

FLOPUS, De Qualitate Vitæ. Fragment 8. Hence the proverb, "Poeta nascitur, non fit," the poet is born, not made.

And, therefore, is an old proverb, Orator fit, poeta nascitur.

SIR PHILIP SMAREY, Apologie for Poetrie. (1595)

⁹ A good poet's made as well as born.

BEN JONSON, To the Memory of Shakespeare.

¹⁰ The god makes not the poet; but The thesis, vice-versa put, Should Hebrew-wise be understood: And means, the poet makes the god.

MATTHEW PRYOR, Epistle to Fleetwood Shepherd. No. I, l. 62.

¹¹ No man is so born a poet but that he needs to be regenerated into a poetic artist.

JOHN STERLING, Essays and Tales: Thoughts and Images.

IV—Poets: Their Madness

¹² All poets are mad.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Democritus to the Reader.

¹³ For that fine madness still he did retain, Which rightly should possess a poet's brain.

DRAYTON, To Henry Reynolds: Of Poets and Poesy, l. 109.

The man is mad, or else he's writing verses. (Aut insanit homo aut versus facit.)

HORACE, Satires, Bk. ii, sat. 7, l. 117. The line is spoken by Davus, Horace's slave, referring to his master's eccentric habits.

¹⁴ Perhaps no person can be a poet, or even enjoy poetry, without a certain unsoundness of mind.

MACAULAY, Essays: Milton.

¹⁵ Prince of sweet songs made out of tears and fire. A harlot was thy nurse, a God thy sire;

Shame soiled thy song, and song assailed thy shame.

But from thy feet now death has washed the mire,

Love reads out first, at head of all our choir, Villon, our sad bad glad mad brother's name.

SWINBURNE, Ballad of François Villon: Envoi.

Mad verse, sad verse, glad verse and bad verse. JOHN TAYLOR THE WATER-POET. Title of book. (1644)

How sad and mad and bad it was, But then, how it was sweet!

ROBERT BROWNING, Confessions.

V—Poets: Their Inspiration

¹⁶ Shuddering they drew her garments off—and found

A robe of sackcloth next the smooth, white skin.

Such, poets, is your bride, the Muse! young, gay,

Radiant, adorn'd outside; a hidden ground Of thought and of austerity within.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Austerity of Poetry.

¹ The world but feels the present's spell,
The poet feels the past as well;
Whatever men have done, might do,
Whatever thought, might think it too.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Bacchanalia. Pt. II, l. 65.

Not deep the Poet sees, but wide.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Resignation, l. 212.

Poets, who bear buckets to the well
Of ampler draught.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. vi, l. 135.

² For as nightingales do upon glow-worms feed,
So poets live upon the living light.

P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Home.

³ I cast my nets in many streams
To catch the silver fish of dreams.

KARLE WILSON BAKER, Poet Songs.

⁴ The "vision and the faculty divine"

Come not by dreaming; he whose eye is clear

To read the present, reads the future sign,
The truest seer.

HENRY MONTAGU BUTLER, The Seer. See 1529:B.

⁵ Homer's words are as costly and admirable to Homer as Agamemnon's victories are to Agamemnon.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

⁶ Like a Chimborazo under the line, running up from a torrid base through all the climates of the globe.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

With a poet, as with a mountain, the altitude is reckoned by the highest point.

R. U. JOHNSON, Poems of Fifty Years: Preface.

⁷ Do not judge the poet's life to be sad because of his plaintive verses and confessions of despair. Because he was able to cast off his sorrows into these writings, therefore went he onward free and serene to new experiences.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. v, p. 520.

Slow comes the verse that real woe inspires:

Grief unaffected suits but ill with art,

Or flowing numbers with a bleeding heart.

THOMAS TICKELL, To the Earl of Warwick, on the Death of Mr. Addison, l. 6.

⁸ 'Tis one of the mysteries of our condition that the poet seems sometimes to have a mere talent,—a chamber in his brain into which an angel flies with divine messages, but the man, apart from this privilege, commonplace. . . .
Poets are not to be seen.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. x, p. 360.

⁹ Turnpike is one thing and blue sky another.
Let the poet, of all men, stop with his inspiration. The inexorable rule in the muse's court, either inspiration or silence, compels

the bard to report only his supreme moments.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Poetry and Imagination.

¹⁰ If bright the sun, he carries,
All day his song is heard;
And when he goes he carries
No more baggage than a bird.

EMERSON, The Poet.

Ever the Poet from the land
Steers his bark and trims his sail;
Right out to sea his courses stand,
New worlds to find in pinnace frail.

EMERSON, Quatrains: Poet.

Tell men what they knew before,
Paint the prospect from their door,
Give to barrows, trays, and pans
Grace and glimmer of romance.

EMERSON, Quatrain.

¹¹ Whatever can happen to man has happened so often that little remains for fancy or invention. We have all been born; we have most of us been married; and so many have died before us, that our deaths can supply but few materials for a poet.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Works, II, 408. (Hawkins, ed.)

Knowledge of the subject is to the poet what durable materials are to the architect.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Works, II, 408.

To tell of disappointment and misery, to thicken
the darkness of futurity, and perplex the labyrinth of uncertainty, has always been a delicious employment of the poets.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Works, IV, 110.

¹² A stewed poet? he doth sit like an unbraced drum, with one of his heads beaten out; for that you must note, a poet hath two heads as a drum has: one for making, the other repeating!

BEN JOHNSON, The Staple of News: Induction.

¹³ Bards of Passion and of Mirth,

Ye have left your souls on earth!

Ye have souls in heaven too,

Double-lived in regions new.

JOHN KEATS, Ode. Written on the blank page before Beaumont and Fletcher's The Fair Maid of the Inn, and thus addressed to these bards in particular.

¹⁴ As fire is kindled by fire, so is a poet's mind kindled by contact with a brother poet.

JOHN KEBLE, Lectures on Poetry. No. 16.

¹⁵ Content, with meagre scrip and pilgrim staff,
Singing he journeys through the changeable years;

At whiles, he stays to laugh with those that laugh;

And, his way lies through the Vile of Tears,
JAMES B. KERRON, The Sleeping Pilgrim.

He flings a Romany ballad
Out through his prison bars
And, deaf, he sings of nightingales
Or, blind, he sings of stars.

MARY SINTON LITCH, The Poet.

1 Nine-tenths of the best poetry of the world has been written by poets less than thirty years old; a great deal more than half of it has been written by poets under twenty-five.

H. L. MENCKEN, Prejudices. Ser. iii, p. 147.

2 Read from some humbler poet,
Whose songs gushed from his heart,
As showers from the clouds of summer,
Or tears from the eyelids start;

Who, through long days of labor,
And nights devoid of ease,
Still heard in his soul the music
Of wonderful melodies.

LONGFELLOW, The Day Is Done.

3 Poets have forgotten that the first lesson of literature, no less than of life, is the learning how to burn your own smoke; that the way to be original is to be healthy; . . . and that to make the common marvellous . . . is the test of genius.

J. R. LOWELL, My Study Windows: Chaucer.

4 A poet, soaring in the high region of his fancies, with his garland and singing robes about him,

MILTON, Church Government. Bk. ii, Intro.

5 Through moving waters of his mind
He daily drags thought's seine along,
Hoping within its mesh to find
A song!

J. R. MORELAND, The Poet.

6 Dreamer of dreams, born out of my due time,
Why should I strive to set the crooked straight?

Let it suffice me that my murmuring rhyme
Beats with light wing against the ivory gate,

Telling a tale not too importunate

To those who in the sleepy region stay,

Lulled by the singer of an empty day.

WILLIAM MORRIS, Earthly Paradise: Apology.

7 Whether verses are good for aught, I doubt; they have always been my bane. . . . Would that the Muses had looked away when I began to write, and Phœbus refused to aid me when my attempt was new. (An prosint, dubium, nocuerunt carmina semper; . . . Averis utinam tetigissem carmina Musis, Phœbus et inceptum destituisset opus!)

OVID, Amores. Bk. iii, eleg. 12, l. 13.

8 There is a god within us; we are in touch with heaven: from celestial places comes our inspiration. (Est deus in nobis, et sunt commercia celi: Sedibus ætheriis spiritus ille venit.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. iii, l. 549.

There is a god within us. It is when he stirs that our bosom warms; it is his impulse that sows the seeds of inspiration. (Est deus in nobis; agitante calescimus illo: Impetus hic sacræ semina mentis habet.)

OVID, Fasti. Bk. vi, l. 5.

9 To build from matter is sublimely great,
But gods and poets only can create.

WILLIAM PITT, To the Unknown Author of the Battle of the Sexes.

10 All good poets, epic as well as lyric, compose their beautiful poems not as works of art, but because they are inspired and possessed.

PLATO, Ion. Sec. 533.

Poets utter great and wise things which they do not themselves understand.

PLATO, The Republic. Bk. ii, sec. 5.

11 If I could dwell Where Israel!

Hath dwelt, and he where I,—

He might not sing so wildly well

A mortal melody,

While a bolder note than his might swell

From my lyre within the sky.

EDGAR ALLAN POE, Israel.

12 While pensive Poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep.

POPE, The Dunciad. Bk. i, l. 93.

13 Curs'd be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe,
Give Virtue scandal, Innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear!

POPE, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l. 283.

14 Where stray ye, Muses! in what lawn or grove, . . .

In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides?

POPE, Pastorals: Summer, l. 23.

Rise, honest Muse! and sing the Man of Ross.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. iii, l. 250. The Man of Ross was John Kyrle, of Herefordshire.

15 Verse comes from Heav'n, like inward light;
Mere human pains can ne'er come by't;

The god, not we, the poem makes;

We only tell folks what he speaks.

PRIOR, Epistle to Fleetwood Shepherd, l. 41.

16 Sweet the exultance of song, but the strain that precedes it is sweeter,

And never was poem yet writ, but the meaning outmastered the metre.

RICHARD RIALTY, Indirection.

No song's pinions ever can Quite out-soar the heart of man!

RICHARD ROWLEY, To a Poet.

¹ The degree in which a poet's imagination dominates reality is, in the end, the exact measure of his importance and dignity.

GEORGE SANTAYANA, The Life of Reason. Vol. iv, p. 114.

² O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V: Prologue, l. 1.

³ The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;
And as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.
Act v, sc. 1, l. 12.

⁴ Thus, great with child to speak, and helpless in my throes,
Biting my truant pen, beating myself for spite:

"Fool!" said my Muse to me, "look in thy heart, and write."

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Astrophel and Stella. Sonnet i, Sec 2251:10.

For voices pursue him by day,
And haunt him by night,
And he listens, and needs must obey,
When the Angel says, "Write!"
LONGFELLOW, The Poet and His Songs.

Would you have your songs endure?
Build on the human heart!

ROBERT BROWNING, Sordello. BK. II.

"Give me a theme," the little poet cried,
"And I will do my part,"
"Tis not a theme you need," the world replied;
"You need a heart."

R. W. GILDER, Wanted, a Theme.

⁵ The poet in a golden clime was born,
With golden stars above;
Dower'd with the hate of hate, the scorn of scorn,

The love of love.
TENNYSON, The Poet.

⁶ Vex not thou the poet's mind
With thy shallow wit;
Vex not thou the poet's mind,
For thou canst not fathom it.
Clear and bright it should be ever,
Flowing like a crystal river,
Bright as light, and clear as wind.
TENNYSON, The Poet's Mind.

⁷ The Poet gathers fruit from every tree, Yea, grapes from thorns and figs from thistles
he.

Plucked by his hand, the basest weed that grows

Towers to a lily, reddens to a rose.

WILLIAM WATSON, Four Epigrams.

The statue—BUONARROTI said—doth wait,
Thrall'd in the block for me to liberate.
The poem—saith the poet—wanders free
Till I betray it to captivity.

WILLIAM WATSON, Four Epigrams.

VI—Poets: Their Virtues

⁸ Happy who in his verse can gently steer
From grave to light, from pleasant to severe.
(Heureux qui, dans ses vers, sait d'une voix légère

Passer de grave au doux, du plaisant au sévère.)

BOILEAU, L'Art Poétique. Canto i, l. 75. (Dryden, tr.)

Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe.

POPE, Essay on Man. Epist. iv, l. 379.

⁹ O brave poets, keep back nothing,
Nor mix falsehood with the whole!
Look up Godward; speak the truth in Worthy song from earnest soul:

Hold, in high poetic duty,

Truest Truth the fairest Beauty!

E. B. BROWNING, The Dead Pan. St. 39.

¹⁰ I reckon, when I count at all,
First Poets—then the Sun—
Then Summer—then the Heaven of God—
And then the list is done.

But looking back—the first so seems

To comprehend the whole—

The others look a needless show,

So I write Poets—All.

EMILY DICKINSON, Poems. Pt. vi, No. 9.

¹¹ True poets are the guardians of the state.

WENTWORTH DILLON, Essay on Translated Verse, l. 356.

¹² There was never poet who had not the heart
in the right place.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Success.

¹³ By many hands the work of God is done, Swart toil, pale thought, flushed dream, he spurneth none:

Yea! and the weaver of a little rhyme

Is seen his worker in his own full time.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, English Poems: Inscription, p. 105.

¹⁴ All that is best in the great poets of all countries is not what is national in them, but what is universal.

LONGFELLOW, Kavanaugh. Ch. 20.

CHAUCEY, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 95.

³ Let me for once presume t' instruct the times,
To know the Poet from the man of rhymes:

'Tis he who gives my breast a thousand pains,
Can make me feel each passion that he feigns,
Enrage, compose, with more than magic art,
With pity and with terror tear my heart,
And snatch me o'er the earth, or thro' the air,
To Thebes, to Athens, when he will, and where.

Pope, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. II, epic. i, l. 340.

The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.

epic. i, l. 268. Referring to Dryden.

⁴ I learnt life from the poets.

MADAME DE STAEL, Corinne. Bk. xviii, ch. 5.

⁵ He is a poet strong and true
Who loves wild thyme and honey-dew;
And like a brown bee works and sings
With morning freshness on his wings,
And a golden burden on his thighs,—
The pollen-dust of centuries!

MAURICE THOMPSON, Wild Honey.

⁶ Blessings be with them—and eternal praise,
Who gave us nobler loves, and nobler arts,—

The Poets, who on earth have made us heirs
Of truth and pure delight by heavenly lays!

VII—Poets: Their Shortcomings

⁸ I agree with one of your reputable critics that a taste for drawing-rooms has spoiled more poets than ever did a taste for gutters.

THOMAS BREE, The Mauve Decade, p. 235.

⁹ "Poets needs must be
Or men or women—more's the pity"—"Ah,

But men, and still less women, happily.
Scarce need be poets."

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. ii, l. 90.

¹⁰ I do distrust the poet who discerns
No character or glory in his times.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. v, l. 189.

Your poet who sings how Greeks
That never were, in Troy which never was,
Did this or the other impossible great thing.

ROBERT BROWNING, Mr. Sludge "The Medium."

¹¹ Yet half a beast is the great god Pan,
To laugh as he sits by the river,
Making a poet out of a man:

The true gods sigh for the cost and the pain—
For the reed that grows nevermore again
As a reed with the reeds in the river.

E. B. BROWNING, A Musical Instrument.

¹² I have never yet known a poet who did not

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 4, l. 33.

I hate all Boets and Bainters.

GEORGE I OF ENGLAND. (CAMPBELL, Life of Lord Mansfield, ch. 30, note.)

But was there ever such stuff as the great part of Shakespeare? Is it not sad stuff? But one must not say so.

GEORGE III OF ENGLAND, Remark, to Miss Burney.

Doctors undertake a doctor's work; carpenters handle carpenter's tools: but, skilled or unskilled, we scribble poetry, all alike.

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 2, l. 102.

We poets are, in every age and nation,
A most absurd, wrong-headed generation.

SAMUEL JENYNS, Imitation of Horace. Bk. ii, epis. 1.

We poets are (upon a poet's word)

Of all mankind, the creatures most absurd.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 1, l. 358.

A poetical tempest arises. (Poetica surgit Tempestas.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. xii, l. 24.

VIII—The Poet and His Song

See also Song and Singer

Dropped feathers from the wings of God
My little songs and snatches are.

KARLE WILSON BAKER, Poet Songs.

And I made a rural pen,

And I stained the water clear,

And I wrote my happy songs

Every child may joy to hear.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Reeds of Innocence.

Content, as random fancies might inspire,

If his weak harp at times or lonely lyre

He struck with desultory hand, and drew

Some softened tones, to Nature not untrue.

W. L. BOWLES, Sonnets.

O my uncared-for songs, what are ye worth,

That in my secret book, with so much care,

I write you, this one here and this one there,

Marking the time and order of your birth?

ROBERT BRIDGES, The Growth of Love. St. 51.

12

Many tender souls

Have strung their losses on a rhyming thread,
As children cowslips.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. i, l. 946.

Piping a vagrant ditty free from Care.

ROBERT BUCHANAN, Pastoral Pictures.

Some rhyme a neebor's name to lash;

Some rhyme (vain thought!) for needfu'

cash;

Some rhyme to court the country clash,

An' raise a din;

For me, an aim I never fash—

I rhyme for fun.

BURNS, Epistle to James Smith. St. 1.

I am nae poet, in a sense,

But just a rhymier like by chance,

An' hae to learning nae pretence;

Yet, what the matter?

Whene'er my Muse does on me glance,

I jingle at her.

BURNS, Epistle to John Lapraik. St. 9.

15

There is a pleasure in poetic pains

Which only poets know.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. ii, l. 285. Quoted by Wordsworth, Miscellaneous Sonnets. Sonnet

xix, l. 1.

18

Yea, though he sang not, he was true song

A light, a benediction.

Good people all, of every sort,
Give ear unto my song;
And if you find it wondrous short,
It cannot hold you long.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, Elegy on the Death of a Mad Dog.

² To write a verse or two, is all the praise
That I can raise.

GEORGE HERBERT, Praise.

I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds, and bowers,
Of April, May, of June, and July flowers;
I sing of May-poles, hock-carts, wassails, wakes,
Of bridegrooms, brides, and of their bridal-cakes.
I write of Youth, of Love, and have access
By these, to sing of cleanly wantonness.
I sing of dews, of rains, and, piece by piece,
Of balm, of oil, of spice, and ambergris.
I sing of times trans-shifting; and I write
How roses first came red, and lilies white.

ROBERT HERRICK, The Argument of His Book.

³ I sometimes sit beneath a tree
And read my own sweet songs.

O. W. HOLMES, The Last Reader.

I know not why, but even to me
My songs seem sweet when read to thee.

HENRY THOMSON, A Tripe.

⁴ For dear to Gods and man is sacred song.
Self-taught I sing; by Heav'n, and Heav'n alone,

The genuine seeds of poesy are sown.

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xxii, l. 382. (Pope, tr.)

⁵ A humble bard, I fashion laborious songs.
(Operosa parvus Carmina fingo.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iv, ode 2, l. 31.

But if you rank me among lyric bards,
With my exalted head I touch the stars.
(Quodsi me lyricis vatibus inseris, Sublimi feriam sidera vertice.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. i, ode 1, l. 35.

⁶ My poesy was, "The deeper, the sweeter."

BEN JONSON, Every Man in His Humour. Act ii, sc. 4.

⁷ But since the world with writing is possest,
I'll versify in spite; and do my best
To make as much waste-paper as the rest.

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. i, l. 23. (Dryden, tr.)

⁸ Could I but speak it and show it,
This pleasure more sharp than pain,
That baffles and lures me so,
The world should once more have a poet,
Such as it had
In the ages glad,
Long ago!

J. R. LOWELL, In the Twilight.

⁹ Lo! he am I whose light verse yields to none;

Reader, thy love, not awe, methinks I've won.
Let greater men strike loftier notes: I earn Enough if my small themes oft to thy hands return.

(Ille ego sum nulli nugarum laude secundus,
Quem non miraris sed puto, lector, amas.
Majores majora sonent: mihi parva locuto
Sufficit in vestras saepe redire manus.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. ix, epig. 1.

¹⁰ Better be a cornfed bard, writing lyrics by the yard, with an appetite so gay it won't balk at prairie hay, than to have a mighty pile, and forget the way to smile!

WALT MASON, Plutocrat and Poet.

¹¹ More safe I sing with mortal voice, unchang'd
To hoarse or mute, though fall'n on evil days,
On evil days though fall'n, and evil tongues.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. vii, l. 24.

¹² My unpremeditated verse.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ix, l. 24.

And as in Beauty's bower he pensive sate,
Pour'd forth this unpremeditated lay,
To charms as fair as those that soothed his happier day.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto i, st. 84.

The unpremeditated lay.

SCOTT, The Lay of the Last Minstrel: Introduction, l. 18.

A bard here dwelt, more fat than bard besceams
Who, void of envy, guile, and lust of gain,
On virtue still, and nature's pleasing themes,
Poured forth his unpremeditated strain.

JAMES THOMSON, The Castle of Indolence.

Canto i, st. 68. Thomson himself is meant by "a bard here dwelt," and in a footnote he says: "The following lines of this stanza were writ by a friend of the author." The friend is supposed to have been Lord Lyttelton.

¹³ As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came.

POPE, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l. 127.

In numbers warmly pure and sweetly strong.

WILLIAM COLLINS, Ode to Simplicity, l. 3.

By magic numbers and persuasive sound.

CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act i, sc. 1.

To add to golden numbers golden numbers.

¹⁴ For I was taught in Paradise
To ease my breast of melodies.

KEATS, Faery Song.

¹⁵ And song is as foam that the sea-winds fret, Though the thought at its heart should be deep as the sea.

SWINBURNE, Poems and Ballads. Second Series: Dedication.

¹⁶ Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in!

THOMSON, In Memoriam. Pt. cvi, st. 5.

I do but sing because I must,
And pipe but as the linnets sing.

TENNISON, In Memoriam. Pt. xxi, st. 6.

I sing but as the linnet sings.

GOETHE, Wilhelm Meister: Bk. ii, ch. 11, The Harper's Song. (Carlyle, tr.)

Soft as a bubble sung
Out of a linnet's lung.

RALPH HODGSON, Eve.

I was singing as a bird mourns. (Je chantais comme l'oiseau gémit.)

LAMARTINE, Le Poète Mourant.

The Doric reed once more
Well-pleased, I tune.

THOMSON, The Seasons: Autumn, l. 3.

I, too, have songs; me also the shepherds call a poet, but I trust them not. For as yet, methinks, I sing nothing worthy of a Varius or a Cinna, but gabble as a goose among melodious swans. (Sed argutos inter strepere anser olores.)

VERGIL, Eclagues. No. ix, l. 33.

When to my haughty spirit I rehearse
My verse,

Faulty enough it seems; yet sometimes when
I measure it by that of other men,
Why, then—

I see how easily it might be worse.

J. T. TROWBRIDGE, An Odious Comparison.

Wake, Betsy, wake, my sweet galoot!
Rise up, fair lady, while I touch my lute!
ARTEMUS WARD, Among the Fenians.

I sound my barbaric yawp over the roofs of the world.

WALT WHITMAN, Song of Myself. Sec. 52.

If I had peace to sit and sing,
Then I could make a lovely thing;
But I am stung with goads and whips,
So I build songs like iron ships.
Let it be something for my song,
If it is sometimes swift and strong.

ANNA WICKHAM, The Singer.

Surely there was a time I might have trod
The sunlit heights, and from life's dissonance Struck one clear chord to reach the ears of God.

OSCAR WILDE, Helas! Lines prefixed to his poems, Paris edition, 1903.

I have seized life by the poetic side.

FRANZ WOEFFEL, (EMERSON, Journals, 1868.)

The moving accident is not my trade;
To freeze the blood I have no ready arts:
'Tis my delight, alone in summer shade,
To pipe a simple song for thinking hearts.

WORDSWORTH, Hart-leap Well. Pt. ii, st. 1.

He murmurs near the running brooks
A music sweeter than their own.

WORDSWORTH, A Poet's Epitaph, l. 39.

The harvest of a quiet eye
That broods and sleeps on his own heart.

POISON

When the Fates will, two poisons work for good. (Cum fata volunt, bina venena juvant.)

AUSONIUS, Epigrams. No. iii, l. 12.

Venom destroys venom.

LANGLAND, Piers Plowman. Passus xxi, l. 156.

The gnat that sings his summer's song
Poison gets from Slander's tongue.
The poison of the snake and newt
Is the sweat of Envy's foot.

The poison of the honey-bee
Is the artist's jealousy. . . .

The strongest poison ever known
Came from Caesar's laurel crown.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Auricles of Innocence, l. 45.

The poisons are our principal medicines, which kill the disease, and save the life.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Considerations by the Way.

Tobacco, coffee, alcohol, hashish, prussic acid, strychnine, are weak dilutions: the surest poison is time.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Old Age.

The coward's weapon, poison.

PIRINEAS FLETCHER, Sicelides. Act v, sc. 3.

One drop of poison infecteth the whole tun of wine.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues, p. 39.

A little poison embitters much sweetness.

UNKNOWN, Old English Homilies. Ser. i, p.
23. (c. 1175)

What to some is food, to others may be sharp poison. (Quod aliis cibus est, aliis fuit acre

What's one man's poison, signior,

Is another's meat or drink.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Love's Cure. Act
iii, sc. 2.

And one man's meat, another's poison is.

JOHN TAYLOR THE WATER-POET, Works, p. 254.

Wan Lo has made an amazing discovery.

"I have found," he cries,

"That what is one man's poison
Is another man's poison."

HENRY HARRISON, Wan Lo Tanke.

A little poison now and then: that causeth pleasant dreams; and much poison at last for an easy death.

How could I face them and say, "The emergency is so great that I must ask you to forget the burglary of 1912, and put this unconvicted felon in the White House?"

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, (THOMPSON: Presidents I've Known, p. 204.)

²⁰ In public life, instead of modesty, incorruptibility, and honesty, shamelessness, bribery, and rapacity hold sway. (Ad rem publicam

... pro pudore, pro abstentia, pro virtute, audacia, largito, avaritia vigeabant.)

SALLUST, Catiline. Sec. 3.

In politics I am sure it is even a Machiavelian holy maxim, "That some men should be ruined for the good of others."

SWIFT, Essay on English Bubbles.

The public path of life is dirty.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 373.

IV—Politics: Their Reformation

To convince a poor voter by the common argument of promised reforms is merely to corrupt him with hope.

CHARLES JOHN DARLING, Scintilla Juris.

When shall the softer, saner politics, Whereof we dream, have play in each proud land?

THOMAS HARDY, Departure, l. 11.

The purification of politics is an iridescent dream. Government is force. . . . The Decalogue and the Golden Rule have no place in a political campaign. . . . The commander who lost the battle through the activity of his moral nature would be the derision and jest of history.

JOHN J. INGALLS, Article, New York World, 1890.

Most schemes of political improvement are very laughable things.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (BOSWELL, Life, ii, 102.)

As it was in the beginning,
Is to-day official sinning,

And shall be for evermore.

RUDYARD KIPPLING, A General Summary.

V—Politics: Measures Not Men

Measures, not men.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letter, 6 March, 1742;

EARL OF SHELburne, Letter, 11 July, 1763.

Measures, not men, have always been my mark.
GOLDSMITH, The Good-Natured Man. Act ii, sc. 1. (1768)

It is necessary that I should qualify the doctrine of its being not men, but measures, that I am determined to support. In a monarchy it is the duty of parliament to look at the men as well as at the measures.

LORD BROUGHAM, Speech, House of Commons. Nov., 1830.

Of this stamp is the cant of "Not men but measures"; a sort of charm by which many people get loose from every honourable engagement.

EDMUND BURKE, Thoughts on the Cause of the Present Discontents. (1770)

Away with the cant of "Measures, not men!"—the idle supposition that it is the harness and not the horses that draw the chariot along. No Sir, if the comparison must be made, if the distinction must be taken, men are everything, measures comparatively nothing.

GEORGE CANNING, Speech, against the Addington Ministry, 1801.

It used to be an applauded political maxim, "Measures, not men." I venture to denounce the soundness of this maxim, and to propose "Men, not measures." . . . Better a hundred times an honest administration of an erroneous policy than a corrupt administration of a good one.

E. J. PHELPS, Address, at dinner N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 19 Nov., 1889.

VI—Politics: Parties

All political parties die at last of swallowing their own lies.

JOHN ARBUTHNOT, (RICHARD GARNETT, Life of Emerson, p. 163.)

When great questions end, little parties begin.

WALTER BAGEHOT, English Constitution, p. 261.

Party divisions, whether on the whole operating for good or evil, are things inseparable from free government.

EDMUND BURKE, Observations on a Publication, "The Present State of the Nation."

Being of no party,
I shall offend all parties:—never mind!
My words, at least, are more sincere and hearty

Than if I sought to sail before the wind.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ix, st. 26.

In these days, more emphatically than ever,
"to live, signifies to unite with a party or to make one."

CARLYLE, Signs of the Times.

Party honesty is party expediency.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Interview, New York Commercial Advertiser. 19 Sept., 1889.

They have proved themselves offensive partisans and unscrupulous manipulators of local party management.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Letter to George William Curtis, 25 Dec., 1884.

To sacrifice one's honour to one's party is so unselfish an act that our most generous statesmen have not hesitated to do it.

CHARLES JOHN DARLING, Scintilla Juris.

I always voted at my party's call,
And never thought of thinking for myself at all!
I thought so little, they rewarded me

By making me the ruler of the Queen's nave!
W. S. GILBERT, Pinafore. Act I.

1 Party is organized opinion.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, Oxford, 25 Nov., 1864.

2 I believe that without party Parliamentary Government is impossible.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, Manchester, 3 April, 1872.

All free governments are party governments.

JAMES A. GARFIELD, Remarks, on the death of Oliver H. P. Morton, House of Representatives, 18 Jan., 1878.

3 Still violent, whatever cause he took,
But most against the party he forsook;
For renegadoes, who ne'er turn by halves,
Are bound in conscience to be double knaves.
DRYDEN, Absalom and Achitophel. Pt. II, l. 364.

4 At home the hateful names of parties cease,
And factious souls are wearied into peace.
DRYDEN, Astræa Redux, l. 312.

5 The vice of our leading parties in this country is that they do not plant themselves on the deep and necessary grounds to which they are respectively entitled, but lash themselves to fury in the carrying of some local and momentary measure, nowise useful to the commonwealth. Of the two great parties which at this hour almost share the nation between them, I should say that one has the best cause, and the other contains the best men.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: Politics.

In our political parties, compute the power of badges and emblems. See the great ball which they roll from Baltimore to Bunker Hill! Witness the cider-barrel, the log-cabin, the hickory-stick, the palmetto.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

6 Who, born for the universe, narrow'd his mind,
And to party gave up what was meant for mankind.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH, Retaliation, l. 31.

7 The best party is but a kind of conspiracy against the rest of the nation. . . . Ignorance maketh men go into a party, and shame keepeth them from going out of it.

LORD HALIFAX, Works, p. 225.

8 He serves his party best who serves the country best.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES, Inaugural Address, 5 March, 1877.

He serves me most who serves his country best.
HOMER, Iliad. Bk. x, l. 201. (Pope, tr.)

9 If I could not go to heaven but with a party,
I would not go there at all.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to Francis Hopkinson, 1789.

10 Faction, Disappointment's restless child.

SOAME JENYNS, On the Late Attempt on His Majesty's Life.

And clamorous Faction, gagged and bound,
Gasping its life out on the ground.

RICHARD REAUX, Apocalypse.

11 Our differences are policies, our agreement: principles.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY, Speech, at Des Moines 1901.

12 A party of order or stability and a party of progress or reform are both necessary elements of a healthy state of political life.

JOHN STUART MILL, On Liberty. Ch. 2.

13 Any party which takes credit for the rain must not be surprised if its opponents blame it for the drought.

DWIGHT W. MORROW, Campaign Speech, Oct., 1930.

14 Party-spirit, which at best is but the madness of many, for the gain of a few.

POPE, Letter to Blount, 27 Aug., 1714.

Party is the madness of the many for the gain of a few.

POPE, Thoughts on Various Subjects. Sometimes mistakenly ascribed to Swift.

15 A good party is better than the best man that ever lived.

THOMAS B. REED. (W. A. ROBINSON, Life.)

16 The first advice I have to give the party is that it should clean its slate.

LORD ROSEBERRY, Speech, Chesterfield, 16 Dec., 1901.

17 You tell me I am a party man. I hope I shall always be so.

SYDNEY SMITH, Peter Plymley Letters. No. 1.

18 He shall be disfranchised who, in time of faction, takes neither side.

SOLOON, Tables of the Law. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Solon. Sec. 20.)

19 When I first came into Parliament, Mr. Tierney, a great Whig authority, used always to say that the duty of an Opposition was very simple—it was to oppose everything and propose nothing.

LORD STANLEY, Debate, 4 June, 1841.

The Duty of an Opposition is to oppose.

LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL, quoting George Tierney.

VII—Politics: Liberal and Conservative

He belonged to the third party, the quiddists or quids, being the tertium quid, . . . which had no name, but was really an anti-Madison movement.

HENRY ADAMS, John Randolph, p. 182.

You want a seat? Then boldly sate your itch;

Be very radical, and very rich.

ALFRED AUSTIN, The Golden Age.

The Right Honourable gentleman [Sir Robert Peel] caught the Whigs bathing and walked away with their clothes.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, House of Commons, 28 Feb., 1845.

A conservative government is an organized hypocrisy.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, House of Commons, 17 March, 1845. See CONSERVATISM.

It [Liberalism] is the introduction into the practical business of life of the highest kind—namely, politics—of philosophical ideas instead of political principle.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, House of Commons, 5 June, 1848.

The liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand.

Old Testament: Isaiah, xiii, 3.

What is a communist? One who has yearnings

For equal division of unequal earnings.

ESSENER ELLIOT, Epigram.

Parlor bolshevism.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Metropolitan Magazine, June, 1918.

The Democratic party is the party of the Poor marshalled against the Rich. . . . But they are always officered by a few self-seeking deserters from the Rich or Whig party.

EMERSON, Journals, 1857.

The Democratic party is like a mule—without pride of ancestry or hope of posterity.

EMORY STORRS, Speech, during campaign of 1888. Also attributed to William C. Linton, Ignatius Donnelly and Judge Gay Gordon.

The Democratic party is like a man riding backward in a railroad car; it never sees anything until it has got past it.

THOMAS B. REED. (ROBINSON, Life.)

The penguin flies backwards because he doesn't care to see where he's going, but wants to see where he's been.

FRED ALLEN, The Backward View.

Yes, I am a Democrat still, very still.

DAVID B. HILL. When asked, on his return from the Democratic convention of 1896 if he was still a Democrat.

Deprived of all they had [by Cromwell], they took to a wild life of robbery, and were called Tories, from the Irish word meaning a plunderer.

W. S. GAZZEC, Irish History, p. 62.

A gentleman had a red Ribband in his hat . . . he said it signified that he was a Tory. What's that? said she. He answered, An Irish rebel . . . I hear that . . . instead of Cavalier and Roundhead, they are now called Tors and Wiggs.

OLIVER HEYWOOD, Diaries, 24 Oct., 1681.

Where you see a Whig you see a rascal . . . The first Whig was the devil.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Miscellanies. Vol. II, p. 393; and BOSWELL, Life, 1778.

Whig: The name of a faction.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Dictionary of the English Language.

A wise Tory and a wise Whig, I believe, will agree. Their principles are the same, though their modes of thinking are different.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Of Tory and Whig. Written statement given to Boswell, 1783.

There is always some basic principle that will ultimately get the Republican party together. If my observations are worth anything, that basic principle is the cohesive power of public plunder.

A. J. MCLAURIN, Speech, U. S. Senate, May, 1906.

Stalwart Republicans.

JAMES G. BLAINE. Coined in 1877 to describe the group in Congress who fought to sustain the privileges of Republicans in the South.

The Republicans have their splits right after election and Democrats have theirs just before an election.

WILL ROGERS, Syndicate Article, 29 Dec., 1930.

Socialism is simply the degenerate capitalism of bankrupt capitalists. Its one genuine object is to get more money for its professors.

H. L. MENCKEN, Prejudices, Ser. III, p. 109.

I have never given way to that puritanical feeling of the Whigs against dining with Tories.

Tory and Whig in turn shall be my host; I taste no politics in boiled and roast.

SYDNEY SMITH, Letter to John Murray, 1834.

He thinks like a Tory and talks like a Radical, and that's so important now-a-days.

OSCAR WILDE, Lady Windermere's Fan. Act II.

Toryism is an innate principle o' human nature—Whiggism but an evil habit.

JOHN WILSON, Noctes Ambrosianae, No. 4.

By "radical" I understand one who goes too far; by "conservative" one who does not go far enough; by "reactionary" one who won't go at all. I suppose I must be a "progressive," which I take to be one who insists on recognizing new facts, adjusting policies to facts and circumstances as they arise.

WOODROW WILSON, Speech, N. Y., 29 Jan., 1911.

By a progressive I do not mean a man who is ready to move, but a man who knows where he is going when he moves.

WOODROW WILSON, Speech, St. Paul, Minn., 9 Sept., 1919.

¹ A man of hope and forward-looking mind.

WORDSWORTH, The Excursion, Ek. vii, l. 276.

For "right" and "left" as applied to conservatives and liberals, see APPENDIX.

VIII—Politics: Expediency

² I am invariably of the politics of people at whose table I sit, or beneath whose roof I sleep.

GEORGE BORROW, The Bible in Spain, Ch. 16.

And so God save the regent, church, and King! Which means that I like all and every thing.

BYRON, Beppo, St. 48.

³ In politics if thou wouldst mix,
And mean thy fortunes be,
Bear this in mind: Be deaf and blind,
Let great folks hear and see.

ROBERT BURNS, At the Globe Tavern, No. 4.

⁴ Principle is ever my motto, not expediency.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Sybil, Bk. II, ch. 2.

⁵ He [Sir Condy] . . . was very ill-used by the Government about a place that was promised him and never given, after his supporting them against his conscience very honourably, and being greatly abused for it, which hurt him greatly, he having the name of a great patriot in the country before.

MARIA EDGEWORTH, Castle Rackrent: Continuation of Memoirs.

⁶ The greatest superstition now entertained by public men is that hypocrisy is the royal road to success.

R. G. INCHESOLL, Speech, Thirteen Club Dinner, 13 Dec., 1886.

⁷ A marvellous Providence fashioned us hollower,
O' purpose that we might our principles swallow.

J. R. LOWELL, Biglow Papers, Ser. I, No. 4.

It ain't by principles nor men
My prudent course is steadiod:

I scart wich pays the best, an' then
Go into it baldheaded.

J. R. LOWELL, Biglow Papers, Ser. I, No. 6.

Es to my principles, I glory
In hev'in' nothin' o' the sort;

I aint a Whig, I aint a Tory,
I'm jest a candor-date, in short.

J. R. LOWELL, Biglow Papers, Ser. I, No. 7.

Now warn't that a system wuth pains in preservin'?

Where the people found jints an' their frien's dove the carvin'?

J. R. LOWELL, Biglow Papers, Ser. II, No. 5.

⁸ I keep my principle, that of living and dying
the vicar of Bray.

REV. SYMON SYMONDS. Bray is a village in Berkshire, England, and tradition asserts that Symon Symonds, the vicar there, preserved his incumbency for half a century by being twice Protestant and twice Catholic under Henry VIII, Edward VI, Mary, and Elizabeth. (FULLER, Worthies of Berkshire.)

In good King Charles's golden days,
When loyalty no harm meant,

A zealous high-churchman was I,
And so I got preferment. . . .

And this is law that I'll maintain
Until my dying day, sir,

That whatsoever king shall reign,
Still I'll be Vicar of Bray, sir.

UNKNOWN, The Vicar of Bray, (c. 1700)

Sometimes ascribed to a Colonel Fuller, an officer in the army of George I.

He held it safer to be of the religion of the King or Queen that was in being, for he knew that he came raw into the world, and accounted it no point of wisdom to be broiled out of it.

JOHN TAYLOR THE WATER-POET, The Old, Old, Very Old Man, (1635)

Whatever I can say or do,
I'm sure not much avails;

I shall still Vicar be of Bray,
Whichever side prevails.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Tale of the Cobbler and the Vicar of Bray.

I dare be bold, you're one of those

Have took the covenant,
With cavaliers are cavaliers
And with the saints, a saint.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Tale of the Cobbler and the Vicar of Bray.

I loved no King since Forty One

When Prelacy went down,
A Cloak and Band I then put on,
And preached against the Crown.

SAMUEL BUTLER, The Turn-Coat.

I never doubted of the prudent versatility of your Vicar of Bray.

IX—Politics: The Politician

² It is as hard and severe a thing to be a true politician as to be truly moral.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. II.

³ Surely, as there are mountebanks for the natural body, so there are mountebanks for the political body: men who undertake great cures; and perhaps have been lucky in two or three experiments, but want the grounds of science, and therefore cannot hold out.

BACON, Essays: Of Boldness.

⁴ There are three classes of politicians—those who under pressure of an existing evil seek for change; . . . those who, with conscious and definite aim, plant the great Hereafter in the Now; . . . and thirdly, those who with clear eye discern the dependence of the Hereafter upon the Now, and because they shrink from the Hereafter, refuse to take the step which renders it inevitably certain.

GEORGE BRIMLEY, Essays: Wordsworth's Poems.

⁵ I was not swaddled and rocked and dawdled into a legislator.

EDMUND BURKE, Letter to a Noble Lord.

⁶ An honest politician is one who, when he is bought, will stay bought.

WILLIAM WATSON, Sketch of a Political Character.

⁷ Things get very lonely in Washington sometimes. The real voice of the great people of America sometimes sounds faint and distant in that strange city. You hear politics until you wish that both parties were smothered in their own gas.

WOODROW WILSON, Speech, St. Louis, Mo., 5
Sept., 1919.

It is easy enough to see why a man goes to the

X—Politics: Office-Holding

⁸ No man who ever held the office of President would congratulate a friend on obtaining it.

He will make one man ungrateful, and a hundred men his enemies, for every office he can bestow.

JOHN ADAMS, referring to the election of his son, John Quincy Adams, to the Presidency. (QUINCY, Figures of the Past, p. 74.)

Every time I bestow a vacant office I make a hundred discontented persons and one ingrate.
(Toutes les fois que je donne une place vacante, je fais cent mécontents et un ingrat.)

LOUIS XIV. (VOLTAIRE, Siecle de Louis XIV.)

⁹ In order to distribute the offices according to merit it is necessary for the citizens to know each other's personal characters. . . . Haphazard decision is unjust, and this must obviously prevail in a numerous community.

ARISTOTLE, Politica. Bk. vii, ch. 4, sec. 7.

But we'll hae ane true 'mang ourself,
A man we ken, and a' that.

of Secretary W. W. Belknap, in 1876. (HOAR, Autobiography of Seventy Years, i, 307.)

What are we here for, except the offices?

WEBSTER FLANAGAN, leader of the Republican party in Texas, at the national Republican convention, in 1880. (Dict. Amer. Biog., vi, 453. See also The Nation, 10 June, 1880.)

⁵ But the President has paid dear for his White House. It has commonly cost him all his peace and the best of his manly attributes.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Compensation.

Even in the White House one must keep house with oneself.

SILAS BENT, Justice O. W. Holmes, p. 254.

⁶ Of the various executive duties, no one excited more anxious concern than that of placing the interests of our fellow citizens in the hands of honest men, with understanding sufficient for their stations. No duty is at the same time more difficult to fulfil.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to Elias Shipman,
12 July, 1801.

No duty the Executive has to perform is so trying as to put the right man in the right place.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. As quoted by J. B. Mc-Master, History of the People of the United States, Vol. II, p. 586.

I have always believed that success would be the inevitable result if the two services, the army and the navy, had fair play, and if we sent the right man to fill the right place.

SIR AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, Speech, in Parliament, 15 Jan., 1855.

⁷ Whenever a man has cast a longing eye on offices, a rottenness begins in his conduct.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to T. Coxe, 1799.

⁸ Few die and none resign.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to a Committee of Merchants of New Haven, 12 July, 1801.
The exact words were, "If a due participation of office is a matter of right, how are vacancies to be obtained? Those by death are few: by resignation, none."

⁹ Wherefore the Little Tin Gods harried their little tin souls,

Seeing he came not from Chatham, jingled
no spurs at his heels,

Knowing that, nevertheless, was he first on the Government rolls

For the billet of "Railway Instructor to Little Tin Gods on Wheels."

RUDYARD KIPLING, Public Waste. The phrase
"Little tin gods on wheels" has been attributed to Robert Grant.

¹⁰ It is easier to appear worthy of a position one does not hold, than of the office which ¹² To place and power all public spirit tends,

In place and power all public spirit ends;

Is to desire some little place:
And fair pretensions I have for't,
Much need, and very small desert.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Epistle to Fleetwood Shepherd. No. 2.

1 But long I will not be Jack out of office.
SHAKESPEARE, I Henry VI. Act I, sc. 1, l. 175.

Some folks are Jacks-in-office, fond of power.

3 Every man who takes office in Washington either grows or swells, and when I give a man an office, I watch him carefully to see whether he is swelling or growing.

WOODROW WILSON, Address, Washington, 15
May, 1916.

XI—Politics: Public Office a Public Trust

4 For the administration of the government, like the office of a trustee, must be conducted for the benefit of those entrusted to one's care, out of those to whom it is entrusted.
CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 25, sec. 85.

5 All political power is a trust.
CHARLES JAMES FOX, Speech, 1788.

6 To execute laws is a royal office; to execute orders is not to be a king. However, a political executive magistracy, though merely such,
is a great trust.

EDMUND BURKE, *Reflections on the Revolution
in France*. (1790)

All persons possessing any portion of power ought to be strongly and awfully impressed with an idea that they act in trust, and that they are to account for their conduct in that trust to the one great Master, Author, and Founder of society.

EDMUND BURKE, *Reflections on the Revolution
in France*.

7 All power is a trust; that we are accountable for its exercise; that from the people and for the people all springs, and all must exist.
BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Vivian Grey. Bk. vi, ch.
7. (1826)

The English doctrine that all power is a trust for the public good.

MACAULAY, Essays: Horace Walpole. (1833)

8 It is not fit the public trusts should be lodged in the hands of any till they are first proved and found fit for the business they are to be entrusted with.

MATTHEW HENRY, Commentaries: Timothy,
III. (1768)

9 No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Constitution of the United States. Art. vi, sec.
3. (1787)

10 When a man assumes a public trust, he should consider himself as public property.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. In a conversation with Baron Humboldt. (RAYNER, Life of Jef- ferson, p. 356.)

11 Government is a trust, and the officers of the government are trustees; and both the trust and the trustees are created for the benefit of the people.

HENRY CLAY, Speech, at Lexington, Ky., 16
May, 1829.

12 The very essence of a free government consists in considering offices as public trusts, bestowed for the good of the country, and not for the benefit of an individual or a party.
JOHN C. CALHOUN, Speech, 13 Feb., 1835.

13 An' in convertin' public trusts
To very privit uses.

J. R. LOWELL, The Biglow Papers. Ser. I, No.
6. (1848)

14 The phrase, "public office is a public trust," has of late become common property.

CHARLES SUMNER, Speech, U. S. Senate, 31
May, 1872.

The public offices are a public trust.

W. W. CRAPO, Speech, Republican State Convention, Mass., 1881.

Public office is a public trust, the authority and opportunities of which must be used as absolutely as the public moneys for the public benefit.

DORMAN B. EATON, The "Spoils" System and Civil-Service Reform. Ch. iii.

15 Public officials are the trustees of the people.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Letter Accepting Nomina- tion for Mayor of Buffalo, 1881.

Public officers are the servants and agents of the people to execute laws which the people have made.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Letter Accepting Nomina- tion for Governor of New York, 7 Oct., 1882.

But what man is fit to hold office? Only he who regards political office as a public trust.

A. S. HEWITT, Address, at opening Brooklyn bridge, 24 May, 1883.

16 Public office is a public trust.

WILLIAM C. HUDSON, a newspaper man who was asked to write a campaign document summarizing the achievements of Grover Cleveland, at the opening of his first Presidential campaign, in June, 1884, and who produced this slogan from various utterances by Cleveland. Sometimes attributed to Dan Lamont, Cleveland's campaign manager.

- 1 Your every voter, as surely as your chief magistrate, under the same high sanction, though in a different sphere, exercises a public trust.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Inaugural, 4 Mar., 1885.

- 2 This day the caucus club meets . . . in the garret of Tom Dawes, the adjutant of the Boston regiment.

JOHN ADAMS, Diary, ii, 164, Feb., 1753. The first known instance of the printed use of "caucus," whose origin is uncertain.

- 3 No expedient ever devised could equal it [a debased currency] in efficiency for fertilizing the rich man's field with the sweat of the poor man's brow.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS. (J. T. ADAMS, America's Tragedy.)

With Mr. Slingsby, of the Tower, who did inform me mightily in several things—among others, that the heightening or lowering of money is only a cheat, and do good to some particular men, which, if I can but remember how, I am now by him fully convinced of.

SAMUEL PEPPYS, Diary, 2 Oct., 1666.

- 4 I placed it where it would do the most good.

OAKES AMES, Letter to Henry S. McComb, referring to Crédit Mobilier stock distributed to members of Congress in 1872.

- 5 Winfield Scott Hancock is a good man weighing 250 pounds.

WILLIAM O. BARTLETT, Editorial, New York Sun, 19 Oct., 1880. Hancock was described in the same editorial as "pure, patriotic and good, a fit man to be President."

- 6 This new page opened in the book of our public expenditures, and this new departure taken, which leads into the bottomless gulf of civil pensions and family gratuities.

THOMAS HART BENTON, Speech, U. S. Senate, April, 1841, against a grant to the widow of President William Henry Harrison. Harrison had died on April 4, exactly a month after assuming office.

JAMES G. BLAINE, Speech, House of Representatives, 30 April, 1886, referring to Roscoe Conkling, who never forgave him. (Congressional Globe, 1st session, 39th Cong., p. 2299.)

Beurled and perfumed grandee gazed at by the gallery-gapers.

H. J. ECKENRODE, referring to Roscoe Conkling. (MUZZEY, James G. Blaine, p. 144.)

- 8 The right honourable gentleman [Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke] is the first of the new party who has retired into his political cave of Adullam and he has called about him everyone that was in distress and everyone that was discontented.

JOHN BRICET, Speech on the Reform Bill, March, 1866, referring to Mr. Horsman and other liberals.

David therefore departed thence, and escaped to the cave Adullam; and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him.

Old Testament: I Samuel, xlii, 1.

- 9 John A. Logan is the Head Centre, the Hub, the King Pin, the Main Spring, Mogul, and Mugwump of the final plot.

ISAAC HILL BROMLEY, Impeach Logan, Editorial in N. Y. Tribune, 16 Feb., 1877.

Mugwump D. O. Bradley.

Headline N. Y. Sun, 23 March, 1884. Applied by the Sun, 15 June, 1884, to the "independents" of the Blaine-Cleveland campaign.

A mugwump is a person educated beyond his intellect.

HORACE PORTER, Speech, during Cleveland-Blaine campaign, 1884. The Nation defined a mugwump as "a man who, for some reason or other, is unable to vote his regular party ticket." An Algonquin Indian word, meaning "Big Chief," used in Eliot's translation of the Bible, 1661. Said to have been first used in its political sense by the Indianapolis Sentinel in 1872. Thomas B. Read called them "long-tailed birds of Paradise."

Very few . . . take an active part in politics, however interested they may be in public affairs.

BYRCE, American Commonwealth, ii, iii, 379.

A mugwump is one of those boys who always has his mug on one side of the political fence and his wump on the other.

ALBERT J. ENOEL, Speech, House of Representatives, 23 April, 1936. Credited also to Harold Willis Dodds, President of Princeton University.

- 10 I shall not help crucify mankind upon a cross of gold. I shall not aid in pressing down upon the bleeding brow of labor this crown of thorns.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN, Speech, House of Representatives, 22 Dec., 1894.

You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns; you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN, Speech, before National Democratic Convention, Chicago, 10 July, 1896. Concluding sentence.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN. Phrase used by him in the 1896 campaign to describe the East, specifically New York.

I never said, "Great is Tammany and Croker is its prophet," Bryan did.

CHAMP CLARK, Memories.

In a consistent, albeit futile gesture, therefore, he [Bryan] resolved to invade "The enemy's country" and formally accept his nomination at Madison Square Garden—"the champion of Lazarus at the gates of Dives."

PAXTON HUBBEN, The Fearless Leader, p. 197.

The first quoted phrase was Bryan's, the second was coined by Edward C. Little.

Ours is no sapling, chance-sown by the fountain, blooming at Beitane, in winter to fade.

SCOTT, The Lady of the Lake: Canto ii, st. 19.

Quoted by Senator Vest in nominating Richard Parks Bland for the Presidency at Chicago, in 1895, referring to Bryan.

² We are Republicans, and we don't propose to leave our party and identify ourselves with the party whose antecedents have been rum, Romanism, and rebellion.

REV. SAMUEL DICKINSON BURCHARD, Speech of Congratulation, to James G. Blaine, at Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York City, 29 Oct., 1884, as spokesman for a party of clergymen gathered to assure him of their support in his presidential campaign. There is good reason to believe that the phrase "rum, Romanism, and rebellion," which Blaine failed to repudiate promptly, lost him the Presidency. Cleveland carried New York by a plurality of 1047, and the state's electoral vote decided the election. Burchard was a Presbyterian clergyman, whom Edward P. Mitchell in the New York Sun described as "a Silurian or early Paleozoic bigot."

The combined power of rebellion, Catholicism and whiskey.

JAMES A. GARFIELD, Letter, 1876, when he thought Tilden elected, explaining how it had happened. (Caldwell, James A. Garfield, p. 251.)

³ One of those damn literary fellers.

SIMON CAMERON, Speech, U. S. Senate, 7 March, 1876, referring to Richard Henry Dana, whose nomination as Minister to Great Britain had just been sent to the Senate by President Grant. Cameron was Senator from Pennsylvania, and succeeded in defeating the nomination. (C. F. ADAMS: Life of R. H. Dana, ii, 376.)

What could you expect from a man who has snubbed seventy Senators!

SIMON CAMERON, in 1870, referring to Judge Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar, whose nomination to the Supreme Court by President Grant the Senate had rejected. Judge Hoar had antagonized the Senate, while Attorney-General by refusing to treat appointments to judgeships as Senate patronage. (Proceedings Mass. Hist. Society, 2d series, ix, 304; Dict. Amer. Biog., ix, 86.)

⁴ He has peculiar powers as an assailant, and almost always, even when attacked, gets himself into that attitude by making war upon his accuser; and he has, withal, an instinct for the jugular and the carotid artery, as unerring as that of any carnivorous animal.

RUFUS CHOATE, referring to John Quincy Adams. (SAMUEL GILMAN BROWN, Memoir of Rufus Choate, p. 417. A note states that this is "from the memorandum of Hon. Charles A. Peabody." Quoted in ALEXANDER, Four Famous New Yorkers, p. 17.)

⁵ I would rather be right than president.

HENRY CLAY. To Preston, of Kentucky, when told that his advocacy of the Missouri compromise measures of 1850 would injure his chances for the Presidency.

The gentleman need not worry. He will never be either.

THOMAS B. REED. Retorting to Congressman Springer, when he quoted Clay's statement (W. A. ROBINSON, Life.)

Bargain and Corruption.

The cry that "barred the door of the Presidency to Henry Clay." (Dictionary of American Biography, ii, 324.)

⁶ It is a condition which confronts us, not a theory.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Annual Message, 1887. Referring to the tariff.

⁷ Let it alone; let it pass. (Laissez faire; laissez passer.)

JEAN BAPTISTE COLBERT, finance minister of Louis XIV of France. (See speech by Lord John Russell, London Times, 2 April, 1840.) Attributed also to Gournay, Minister of Commerce, 1751. Quoted by Adam Smith, Wealth of Nations.

⁸ A halcyon and vociferous occasion.

ROSCOE CONKLING, Speech.

⁹ I do not choose to run for President in 1928. CALVIN COOLIDGE. Statement to press in 1927.

"I do not choose" means in the Yankee language "I am determined not to."

C. W. THOMPSON, Presidents I've Known, p. 348.

In my opinion, it was never meant to bring about the results it did. . . . The President hoped to be the nominee, expected to be the nominee, and was disappointed and distressed when he was not chosen by the convention.

IRVIN HOOD ("Ike") HOOVER, Forty-Two Years in the White House, p. 177.

I should like to be known as a former president who tries to mind his own business.

CALVIN COOLIDGE, (Cosmopolitan Magazine, May, 1930.)

He looks as if he had been weaned on a pickle.

ALICE ROOSEVELT LONGWORTH, characterizing Mr. Coolidge, by quoting her physician. (Crowded Hours, p. 337.)

¹ The convention will be deadlocked, and after the other candidates have gone their limit, some twelve or fifteen men, worn out and bleary-eyed for lack of sleep, will sit down, about two o'clock in the morning, around a table in a smoke-filled room in some hotel, and decide the nomination. When that time comes, Harding will be selected.

HARRY M. DAUGHERTY, campaign manager for Warren G. Harding, predicting with uncanny accuracy the method of Harding's nomination for the Presidency by the Republican National Convention at Chicago, 12 June, 1920. The "smoke-filled room" was Colonel George Harvey's room at the Blackstone Hotel. The convention was deadlocked between General Leonard Wood and Governor Frank O. Lowden, and about two o'clock on the morning of Saturday, 12 June, a small group of the "party elders" got together and selected Harding as a compromise candidate. (See the New York Times, 13 June, 1920; MARK SULLIVAN, Our Times, vol. vi, p. 37.)

We drew to a pair of deuces and filled.

WARREN G. HARDING, commenting on his nomination, just after it had been made, to a group of reporters who had rushed to him, demanding a statement. The phrase is familiar to every poker player. To "fill" means to succeed in getting a "full house," a hand consisting of a pair and three of a kind.

² "Hargrave," said his Lordship, "if you want any information upon points of practical politics."

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Vivian Grey, Ch. 14. (1826) The first known appearance in print of the phrase, "practical politics."

Out of the range of practical politics.

GLADSTONE, Referring to the abolition of the Established Church in Ireland, April, 1867. (O'CONNOR, The Parnell Movement, p. 216.)

It would be interesting to imagine the first President of the United States confronted with some one who had ventured to approach him upon the basis of what is now commonly called "practical politics."

HENRY COOMAN POTTER, Address, Washington Centennial service, 30 April, 1889.

³ The first favourite was never heard of, the second favourite was never seen after the distance post, all the ten-to-oners were in the rear, and a dark horse which had never been thought of, and which the careless St. James had never even observed in the list, rushed past the grand stand in sweeping triumph.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, The Young Duke, Bk. i, ch. 5. (1831)

Who is the dark horse he has in his stable?

THACKERAY, Adventures of Philip.

⁴ We went across, but they won't come across.

A. VICTOR (VIC) DONAHAY, U. S. Senator from Ohio, explaining his vote against American adherence to the World Court, 30 Jan., 1935, referring to American participation in the World War and the refusal of the Allies to pay their debts to the United States. To "come across" is American vernacular for paying up.

⁵ I could travel from Boston to Chicago by the light of my own effigies.

STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS, in 1854, after the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, which he had supported. (RHOODES, History of the United States, Vol. i, p. 496.)

⁶ Water flowed like wine.

WILLIAM M. EVARTS, describing a dinner at the White House in 1877, during the administration of Rutherford B. Hayes, whose wife was a Prohibitionist.

⁷ I am a bigger man than old Grant.

LAFAYETTE FITZBUGH, of Texas, Letter, written to a constituent in 1875. Fitzbugh, who had been sergeant-at-arms of the Confederate Senate, had managed to secure an appointment as file clerk of the document room of the House of Representatives, when the Democrats recovered control of the House and its patronage in 1875. (See New York Sun, 8 Oct., 1916.) The saying has been attributed also to Webster Flanagan and to Tom Ochiltree.

⁸ I will leave the leader of the opposition, for the present, floundering and foundering in the Straits of Malacca.

GLADSTONE, Speech, at Greenwich, Jan., 1874. Referring to Disraeli's accusation that the Liberal government had neglected British interests in the Straits of Malacca.

The country has, I think, made up its mind to close this career of plundering and blundering.

DISRAELI, Letter to Lord Grey de Wilton, Oct., 1873.

Support a compatriot against a native, however the former may blunder or plunder.

R. F. BURTON, Explorations of the Highroads of Brazil. Vol. I, p. 11. (c. 1869)

The foreign policy of the noble earl . . . may be summed up in two truly expressive words: "middle" and "muddle."

LORD DERBY, Speech, House of Lords, Feb., 1864, referring to Earl Russell.

1 What's the use of wasting dynamite when insect-powder will do?

SENATOR CARTER GLASS, in an unpublished speech, Democratic caucus, 1913.

2 Here comes another of the Spell-binders! WILLIAM CASSIUS GOODLOE. Referring to the Republican stump-speakers in campaign of 1888, who were publicised as holding their audiences spell-bound.

3 I have the courage of my opinions, but I have not the temerity to give a political blank cheque to Lord Salisbury.

SIR WILLIAM EDWARD GOSCHEN, Speech, in Parliament, 19 Feb., 1884.

4 Who will burden himself with your liturgical parterre when the burning questions [brennende Fragen] of the day invite to very different toils?

HAGENBACH, Grundlinien der Liturgie und Homiletik. (1803)

The burning question of the day.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, House of Commons, March, 1873.

5 We'll stand pat!

MARK HANNA. When asked by a reporter to state the issue of the 1900 campaign to re-elect McKinley. Hence the sobriquet, "stand-patters." (See STONARD, As I Knew Them, p. 259.) "Stand pat" is a poker term, meaning that the player is satisfied with the cards dealt to him, and desires no new ones.

I felt as if I were before this speech tarred with the brush of being a thick-and-thinnite.

A. J. BALFOUR, Speech, 9 Jan., 1900. The British for standpatter.

6 One thing, if no more, I have gained by my custom-house experience—to know a politician. It is a knowledge which no previous thought, or power of sympathy, could have taught me, because the animal, or the machine rather, is not in nature.

HAWTHORNE, Note Books, 15 March, 1840. Said to be the origin of "machine politics."

Such is the operation of the machine, as now established, that . . . scarcely an individual is certain of his political existence.

DUXE OF WELLINGTON, Letter to Thomas Rokeby, 12 Sept., 1845. (Rokeby-Wellington Correspondence, p. 384.)

They call the system—I do not coin the phrase, I adopt it because it carries its own meaning—the system they call "invisible government."

ELDER ROR. Referring to boss rule, specifically to Thomas C. Platt, of New York.

7 If the Man Higher Up is ever found, take my assurance for it, he will be a large, pale man with blue wristlets showing under his cuffs, and he will be sitting to have his shoes polished within sound of a bowling alley, and there will be somewhere about him turquoises.

O. HENRY, Man About Town.

8 We in America today are nearer to the final triumph over poverty than ever before in the history of any land. The poorhouse is vanishing from among us. We have not yet reached the goal, but given a chance to go forward with the policies of the last eight years, and we shall soon, with the help of God, be within sight of the day when poverty shall be banished from this nation.

HERBERT HOOVER, Speech, 11 Aug., 1928, accepting the Republican nomination for President.

Ours is a land . . . filled with millions of happy homes, blessed with comfort and opportunity. . . . In no nation are the fruits of accomplishment more secure. . . . I have no fears for the future of our country. It is bright with hope.

HERBERT HOOVER, Inaugural, 4 March, 1929.

They are playing politics at the expense of human misery.

HERBERT HOOVER, Statement to the Press, 9 Dec., 1930. Referring to members of Congress who had introduced bills for unemployment relief.

9 Like an armed warrior, like a plumed knight, James G. Blaine marched down the halls of the American Congress and threw his shining lance full and fair against the brazen forehead of every traitor to his country and every maligner of his fair reputation.

ROBERT G. INGHAM, Speech, nominating Blaine for President, at the National Republican Convention, Cincinnati, 15 June, 1876. (Proceedings of the Convention, p. 73-75.)

Let us believe that in the silence of the receding world, he heard the great waves breaking on a farther shore, and felt already upon his wasted brow the breath of the Eternal Morning.

R. G. INGHAM, Eulogy of James G. Blaine.

Mulligan letters.

Letters supposed to show corruption on the part of James G. Blaine in various railroad and land deals in 1869. Used with deadly effect during his campaign against Cleveland, they "probably barred the door of the Presidency to him forever." (Dict. Amer. Biog., II, 324.)

1 No sooner does he hear any of his brothers mention reform or retrenchment, than up he jumps.

WASHINGTON IRVING, The Sketch Book: John Bull. (1820)

I am for peace, for retrenchment, and for reform,—thirty years ago the great watchwords of the great Liberal Party.

JOHN BRICHT, Speech, Birmingham, 28 April, 1859. The phrase dates from 1830, when it was probably said by William IV to Earl Grey in an interview, 17 Nov., 1830, and is in H. B.'s Cartoons, No. 93, 26 Nov., 1830. (See MOLESWORTH, History of the Reform Bill of 1832, p. 98. Also WARREN, Ten Thousand a Year, 1839, where it is inscribed on the banner of Titilbat Titmouse.)

2 John Marshall has made his decision: now let him enforce it!

PRESIDENT ANDREW JACKSON, referring to the Supreme Court decision in Worcester vs. Georgia, 3 March, 1832, which upheld the right of the Cherokee Indians to remain in possession of their land, from which the state was trying to eject them. (GREENEY, The American Conflict, vol. i, p. 106.)

3 We are swinging round the circle.

ANDREW JOHNSON, Speech, on the Presidential Reconstruction tour, August, 1866.

4 It was not free silver that frightened the plutocratic leaders. What they feared then, what they fear now, is free men.

TOM JOHNSON, My Story, p. 109.

5 Allow me to introduce to you my particular friend, Mr. George O. Evans. . . . He understands Addition, Division, and Silence.

WILLIAM H. KEMBLE, while State Treasurer of Pennsylvania, in a letter to Titian J. Coffey, recommending a political protégé, March, 1867. Published in the New York Sun, 20 June, 1872, the phrase soon became famous.

Multiplication, Division and Silence.

MATTHEW STANLEY QUAY, political boss of Pennsylvania, when asked the qualification for a ring or trust. (Every schoolboy knows that "Addition, Division and Silence" was not spoken by Bill Tweed, but written by Matt Quay.—BRANDER MATTHEWS, New York Times Book Review, 1 Jan., 1922.)

6 The brains trust.

JAMES M. KIRKMAN, of the New York Times, in a conversation with Franklin D. Roosevelt, at Hyde Park, N. Y., in August, 1932, referring to the group of Columbia University professors with whom Mr. Roosevelt was consulting concerning his campaign speeches. The phrase was promptly seized upon by the newspapers, and soon modified to "brains trust."

When the first American general staff was appointed from among the army's bright young men and fair-haired boys, some of the old Indian fighters and plains soldiers grumbled, and one of them said, "It's a damned brains trust."

Parenthetically, this was the same old Commissary General Weston who once wise-cracked on General Greely's fitness to be entrusted with the command of many men. Greely had won his rank in the Signal Corps, where the duties are largely technical. He achieved glory in his historic Arctic expedition with a small squad—not all of whom came back. Weston's comment was:—"He never commanded more than tea soldiers—and he ate three of them."

Weston's crack about the Brain Trust lived. One day at Krum Elbow, in the summer of 1932, some bright news-hawk saw a group of young "intellectuals" hanging about Hyde Park and recalled Weston's old wise-crack—"Moley and the brains trust." It stuck.

HUGH S. JOHNSON, Syndicated Article, 12 July, 1935. The General Greely referred to was Major General Adolphus Washington Greely, who headed a disastrous government Arctic expedition in 1881. Hyde Park is the country residence of Franklin D. Roosevelt, in Dutchess County, New York. "Moley" is Raymond Moley, a college professor who, in 1932 and for some time thereafter, was one of Mr. Roosevelt's most trusted advisers.

7 If the policy of the government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, . . . the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their government into the hands of that eminent tribunal.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, First Inaugural Address, 4 March, 1861. (Forum, Aug., 1935, p. 64.)

8 I do not allow myself to suppose that either the convention or the League have concluded to decide that I am either the greatest or best man in America, but rather they have concluded it is not best to swap horses while crossing the river, and have further concluded that I am not so poor a horse that they might not make a botch of it in trying to swap.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Address, to a delegation of the National Union League, which had called to congratulate him on his renomination as the Republican presidential candidate, 9 June, 1864. (RHODES, Hist. of the U. S., iv, 470; NICOLAY AND HAY, Complete Works of Abraham Lincoln, ii, 332.)

I have not permitted myself, gentlemen, to conclude that I am the best man in the country, but I am reminded in this connection of an old Dutch farmer who remarked that it was not best to swap horses while crossing a stream.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. Version of above speech by W. O. Stoddard. (RAYMOND, Life and Public Services of Abraham Lincoln, p. 500.)

¹
Boon-doggie.

ROBERT H. LINK, Eagle Scout, of Rochester, N. Y., claims to have coined the word in 1926 and to have applied it in 1929, to the platted leather neck-strap on his son's Boy Scout uniform. (See Literary Digest, 1 June, 1935, p. 3.) The English Dialect Dictionary, however, states that it is of Scottish origin, and means a marble obtained as a gift. It came to public attention in the spring of 1935 during an investigation in New York City of the rebel activities conducted by the F. D. Roosevelt administration there. It was discovered that there were classes in boon-doggling, that is the plating of leather neck-straps, and the public at once hilariously adopted the word to describe any occupation which was a waste of time and money, especially if connected with New Deal activities.

Boon-doggies are like old-type lanyards. They are made of platted leather. Scouts have been making them for years as uniform ornaments all over the world.

UNKNOWN, Boon-doggies. (Scouting, March, 1930)

If we can boon-doggie our way out of the depression, that word is going to be enshrined in the hearts of the American people for years to come.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, Speech, Newark, N. J., 18 Jan., 1936.

²
The cordial understanding. (L'entente cordiale.)

LOUIS PHILIPPE, Speech, from the throne, January, 1843, referring to the friendly relations existing between France and England, during Guizot's administration of foreign affairs. QUEEN VICTORIA, Letter to Lord John Russell, 7 Sept., 1848.

The cordial understanding which exists between the governments of France and Great Britain. (La cordiale entente qui existe entre le gouvernement français et celui de la Grande-Bretagne.)

UNKNOWN, Article, in Le Charivari, Paris, 6 Jan., 1844, reviewing a speech by Guizot.

The people of two nations [French and English] must be brought into mutual dependence by the supply of each other's wants. There is no other way of counteracting the antagonism of language and race. It is God's own method of producing an entente cordiale.

⁴
There are some things so elastic that even the heavy roller of democracy cannot flatten them altogether down.

J. R. LOWELL, On a Certain Condescension in Foreigners

The steam-roller was first heard of in American politics in June, 1908, when it was applied by Oswald F. Schnette, of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, to the methods employed by the Roosevelt-Taft majority in the Republican National Committee in over-riding the protests against seating Taft delegates from Alabama and Arkansas.

H. L. MENCKEN, American Language, p. 372.

⁵
What piece of work have you now in hand? None in hand, if it like your Majesty, but I am devising a platform in my head.

JOHN LESTER, Alexander and Campaspe, Act v, sc. 4. (1584)

The wisdom of a lawmaker consisteth not only in a platform of justice, but in the application thereof.

BACON, Advancement of Learning, II, 355 (1623)

Because the things did not work forth your platform

OLIVER CROMWELL, Letters, Vol. III, p. 89. (1655)

He can soon quit the way wherein he was, and become religious, after the manner of this novel platform

PATRICK, Parable of the Pilgrim, p. 206 (1687)

The Whigs, whether on the Lexington platform or some other non-committal platform, will be and must be at once known as the party that opposed their country in her just and generous war.

UNKNOWN, Resolutions of the Democratic National Convention, 30 May, 1844. So far as known, the first recorded use of platform in this sense in America. (See the New York Herald, 6 May, 1848.)

⁶
Frauds of which a lame duck on the stock exchange would be ashamed.

MACAULAY, Munro (Miscellany, II, 95) In England a lame duck is a defaulter on the Exchange, in America a defunct Congressman, but lame-duck Congresses were abolished in 1934

I'll have no lame duck's daughter in my family.

TRACERMAN, Vanity Fair, Ch. 13.

President Lincoln selected Hale (John Parker Hale, appointed minister to Spain) out of general kindness and good will to the lame ducks.

E. L. PIERCE, Memoir and Letters of Charles Sumner, Vol. IV, p. 255.

XIII—Politics: Campaign Slogans

⁷
Tippecanoe and Tyler too.

Republican campaign slogan, 1840. "Tippecanoe" was William Henry Harrison, who had won an indecisive victory over the Indians in 1811, at the spot where Tippecanoe Creek empties into the Wabash. Attributed to Orson E. Woodbury.

¹ Fifty-four forty, or fight!

WILLIAM ALLEN, Speech, U. S. Senate, 1844. Adopted as the slogan of the war party, in the presidential election of James K. Polk, 1844. "During the same session war with England regarding the Oregon question seemed imminent. . . . The Democratic convention of 1844 had demanded the reoccupation of the whole of Oregon up to 54° 40', with or without war with England. Stephen A. Douglas was one of the small band of congressmen who shouted for 'fifty-four forty' to the bitter end. It was therefore humiliating to find the new President willing to compromise with Great Britain on the forty-ninth parallel."—Dis. Am. Biog., v, 398.

² We stand for free soil

LLOYD BACON, Motto for the Independent, which he helped to found and edited in 1848.

³ Young America!

Slogan of an important group of the Democratic party during campaign of 1852.

The position and duties of Young America.

EDWIN DE LION (Charleston, 1845), first formulation of Young America idea, in commencement address at South Carolina College, in 1845. The idea was that if there was to be a Young America, the younger generation must seize political power and participate directly in the affairs of the world. (M. E. CURT, American Historical Review, xxxii, 34.)

⁴ Free soil, free men, free speech, Fré-mont. Republican slogan in campaign of 1856.

Oh! we'll give 'em Jesse

When we rally round the polls

Song used by FILLMORE's supporters in the Presidential campaign of 1856.

⁵ Peace at any price; peace and union.

Rallying cry Fillmore Campaign, 1856.

⁶ Repudiate the repudiators

WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN, Speech, presidential campaign of 1868. The phrase became one of the slogans of the campaign.

⁷ Turn the rascals out!

CHARLES A. DANA, used first in the New York Sun, and afterwards as the slogan of Greeley's campaign against Grant in 1872.

⁸ Hurrah for Maria,

hurrah for the kid, voted for Grover and am damn glad I did.

Campaign song, Blaine-Cleveland campaign, 1884, the reference being to Maria Halpin, of Buffalo, N. Y., the mother of Cleveland's reputed illegitimate child. Cleveland always doubted its paternity. (For full story, see NEVINS, Grover Cleveland, pp. 163-167.)

Ma! ma! where's my Pa?

Up in the White House, darling,

Making the laws, working the cause,

Up in the White House, dear

H. R. MONROE, Ma! Ma! Where's My Pa? (1884) Referring to the Maria Halpin scandal. Adopted by the Democrats as a campaign jingle in the form "Ma! Ma! where's my pa? Gone to the White House, ha, ha, ha!"

Tell the truth.

GROVER CLEVELAND, when asked by his campaign managers what they should do about the scandal (Harper's Weekly, 16 Aug., 1884.)

⁹ Blaine, Blaine, Blaine,

The continental liar from the State of Maine,
Burn this letter!

Campaign jingle used by Democrats during Blaine-Cleveland campaign, referring to an incriminating letter written by Blaine to a business associate named Warren G. Fisher, which he had endorsed on the back, "Burn this letter." (NEVINS, Grover Cleveland, p. 161.)

I do not engage in criminal practise.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, when asked why he did not speak for Blaine during the Blaine-Cleveland campaign of 1884 (NEVINS, Grover Cleveland, p. 178.) MURPHY (Life of Blaine, p. 307) attributes the phrase to Roscoe Conkling.

¹⁰ We'll hang Jay Gould to a sour apple tree.

¹¹ He's all right!

Prohibition campaign slogan, 1884, referring to John P. St. John, candidate for President. He had been a Republican party leader, and the Republicans started the cry, "What's the matter with St. John?" The reply was, "Oh, he's all right!" Intended to be ironic, it was promptly adopted by the Prohibitionists. Isaac Golding (The Pan-Alley, p. 64) asserts that Tony Pastor originated the phrase in New York City in 1884, when Abram S. Hewitt was running for Mayor. Pastor wrote a song with the refrain, "What's the matter with Hewitt?" To which the orchestra, and as many of the audience as agreed, would bellow back, "He's all right!" Used also in the Harrison campaign in 1888.

¹² Yes, grandfather's hat fits Ben—fits Ben;
He wears it with dignified grace, Oh yes!
So rally again and we'll put Uncle Ben
Right back in his grandfather's place.

UNKNOWN, Campaign Song, 1888. "Ben" was Benjamin Harrison, Republican candidate for President, whose grandfather was General William Henry Harrison.

Grandpa's Pants Won't Fit Benny.

Democratic slogan in campaign of 1888.

¹³ If the American people want me for this high office, I shall be only too willing to serve them. . . . Since studying this subject I am convinced that the office of President is not such a very difficult one to fill.

ADMIRAL GEORGE DEXTER, announcing his candidacy, 4 April, 1900.

¹ Grover, Grover, Four years more of Grover;
In we'll go, Out they'll go,
Then we'll be in clover.

Democratic campaign song in 1892. Sung to the air of the berceuse in Wang:
Baby, baby, Bless the darling baby;
Down she goes, Up she goes,
Ninety times high as the moon.
J. CHESTER GOODWIN, Wang, Act I.

Wanamaker runs the Sunday School,
Morton runs the bar,
Baby McKee runs the White House,
And by God, here we are!

UNKNOWN. Democratic campaign slogan, 1892, referring to Postmaster-General John Wanamaker, superintendent of a Philadelphia Sunday School; Vice-President Levi P. Morton, who owned the Shoreham hotel, in Washington; and "Baby" McKee, Harrison's small grandson.

The prophet and the ballot-box—both stuffed.
THOMAS B. REED, suggested as a slogan for the Democratic party in 1892.

² Liliuokalani,
Give us your little brown hannie.
Popular jingle, referring to the Hawaiian annexation question, Feb., 1893. Liliuokalani was Queen of the Hawaiian Islands.

³ Elect McKinley, the Advance Agent of Prosperity!
Republican campaign slogan, 1896.

⁴ The full dinner pail.
Republican campaign slogan, 1900, alleged to have been coined by the editor of Judge.

⁵ Ev'ry time I come to town,
The boys keep kickin' my dawg aroun';
Makes no difference if he is a boun',
They gotta quit kickin' my dawg aroun'.
WERN M. OUNCE, They Gotta Quit Kickin' My Dawg Aroun'. Published in 1912, and the slogan of the campaign for Champ Clark in that year.

⁶ The New Freedom.
WOODROW WILSON. Used as the slogan of his first campaign. Grover Cleveland said of it: "Sounds fine—I wonder what it means."

⁷ You have laid upon me this double obligation: "We are relying upon you, Mr. President, to keep us out of war, but we are relying upon you, Mr. President, to keep the honor of the nation unstained."

WOODROW WILSON, Speech, at Cleveland, 29 Jan., 1916.

I am the friend of peace and mean to preserve it for America so long as I am able. . . . War can come only by the wilful acts and aggressions of others.

WOODROW WILSON, Address to Congress, 26 Feb., 1917.

He kept us out of war!

MARTIN H. GLYNN, Keynote Speech, National Democratic Convention, St. Louis, June 15, 1916. Referring to Woodrow Wilson. The phrase became the Democratic slogan of the campaign.

⁸ The fathers who gave us this government were not graduated from soap-boxes

JOSEPH S. SCOTT, Speech, nominating Herbert Hoover, Chicago, 15 June, 1932.

Find me next a Poppy posy,
Type of his harangues so doxy.
MOORE, Wreaths for the Ministers.

Let but my scarlet head appear
And I am held in scorn;
Yet juice of subtle virtue lies
Within my cup of curious dyes.
CHRISTINA ROSSETTI, "Consider the Lilies of the Field."

O simple flower, you speak the tongue
That tear-drops answer; North and South,
The lips of lovers as they clung,
Spoke your sweet language, mouth to mouth.

JOSEPH ELIAS SPINOZZI, Italian Poppies.

Summer set lip to earth's bosom bare,
And left the flushed print in a poppy there.
FRANCIS THOMPSON, The Poppy.

POPULARITY

See also Applause; People, The

An ordinary song or ballad that is the delight of the common people cannot fail to please all such readers as are not unqualified for the entertainment by their affectation or ignorance. . . . For it is impossible that anything should be universally tasted and approved by the multitude, though they are only the rabble of the nation, which bath not in it some peculiar aptness to please and gratify the mind of man.

ADDISON, The Spectator, No. 70.

PLINY THE YOUNGER, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 15.
When I behold what pleasure is Pursuit,
What life, what glorious eagerness it is,
Then mark how full Possession falls from this,
How fairer seems the blossom than the fruit,—
I am perplex, and often stricken mute,
Wondering which attained the higher bliss,
The winged insect, or the chrysalis
It thrust aside with unreluctant foot.

For it so falls out
That what we have we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it, but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value; then we find
The virtue that possession would not show us
Whiles it was ours.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act
iv, sc. 1, l. 219.

Not to understand a treasure's worth
Till time has stol'n away the slighted good,
Is cause of half the poverty we feel,
And makes the world the wilderness it is.

POSTERITY

The care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity.

BACON, Essays: Of Parents and Children.

Not to the Past, but to the Future, looks true nobility, and finds its blazon in posterity.

BULWER-LYTTON, The Lady of Lyons. Act ii, sc. 1.

People will not look forward to posterity, who never look backward to their ancestors.

EDMUND BURKE, *Reflections on the Revolution
in France*.

Be careful of this—it is my carte de visite to posterity.

CHAMPOLLION, On his death-bed, as he gave the printer the revised proofs of his Egyptian Grammar.

I look upon Leaves of Grass . . . as my definitive carte de visite to the coming generations of the New World.

WALT WHITMAN, A Backward Glance o'er Travel'd Roads.

He thinks posterity a packhorse, always ready to be loaded.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, 3 June, 1862.

Posterity is a most limited assembly. Those gentlemen who reach posterity are not much more numerous than the planets.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, 3 June, 1862.

The love of posterity is the consequence of the necessity of death. If a man were sure of living forever here, he would not care about his offspring.

Of a time-honour'd race.

BYRON, The Dream. St. 2.

Believe it, posterity! (Credite, posteri.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. ii, ode 19, l. 2.

He lives to posterity. (Vivit ad posteros.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucilium. Epis. xciii, §.

Our descendants will be still far unhappier than we are. Would I not be a criminal if, notwithstanding this view, I should provide for progeny, i. e., for unfortunates?

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT. Conversation with Arago in 1812.

The ancients said our ancestors, we say posterity. (Les anciens disaient nos ancêtres, nous disons la postérité.)

JOUBERT, Pensées. No. 228.

Posterity, that high court of appeal which is never tired of eulogising its own justice and discernment.

MACAULAY, Essays: Machiavelli.

Like Sir Condy Rackrent in the tale, she survived her own wake, and overheard the judgment of posterity.

MACAULAY, Essays: Madame d'Arblay. Referring to Miss Edgeworth's novel, Castle Rackrent.

Leaving no posterity:

'Twas not their infirmity,

It was married chastity.

SHAKESPEARE, Phoenix and the Turtle, l. 59.

All his successors, gone before him, have done 't; and all his ancestors that come after him, may.

SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives of Windsor, i, 1, 14.

What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,

If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity?

SHAKESPEARE, Venus and Adonis, l. 757.

We are always doing, says he, something for Posterity, but I would fain see Posterity do something for us.

ADDISON, The Spectator. No. 583. (1712)

The man was laughed at as a blunderer who said in a public business: "We do much for posterity;
I would fain see them do something for us."

Mrs. ELIZABETH MONTAGU, Letters, 1 Jan., 1742.

As to posterity, I may ask (with somebody whom I have forgot) what has it ever done to oblige me?

THOMAS GRAY, Letter to Dr. Warton, 8
March, 1758.

As though there were a tie,
And obligation to posterity!
We get them, bear them, breed and nurse.
What has posterity done for us,

That we, lest they their rights should lose,
Should trust our necks to gripe of noose?

JOHN TRUMBULL, McFingal. Canto ii, l. 121.
(1775)

Why should we put ourselves out of the way to do anything for posterity? What has posterity done for us?

SIR BOYLE ROCHE, Speech, in Irish Parliament,
1780. (FLAXINER, Studies in Irish History.)

Few can be induced to labor exclusively for posterity. Posterity has done nothing for us.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Speech, 22 Feb., 1842.

Think of your ancestors and your posterity.
(Mayores vestros et posteritas cogitate.)

TACITUS, Agricola. Sec. 32.

Think of your forefathers! Think of your posterity!

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, Speech, Plymouth,
Mass., 22 Dec., 1802.

⁴ No handicraft can with our art compare,
For pots are made of what we potters are.
UNKNOWN. Motto of 18th century potters, often used on glazed ware. Another version was used by Longfellow in an introduction to Kéramos, and is sometimes mistakenly ascribed to him.

Turn, turn, my wheel! Turn round and round
Without a pause, without a sound:
So spins the flying world away!
This clay, well mixed with marl and sand,
Follows the motion of my hand;
For some must follow, and some command,
Though all are made of clay!

Of ragged penury.

THOMAS GRAY, On the Pleasure Arising from Vicissitude. This stanza is said to have been added to Gray's poem by his biographer, the Rev. William Mason.

Poverty has no means to feed its passion, yet it is not worth while to wish to be poor because of that. (Non habet, unde erum paupertas pascat amorem: Non tamen hoc tanti est, pauper ut esse velit.)

OVID, Remediorum Amoris, l. 749.

¹ Poverty, when it is voluntary, is never despicable, but takes an heroic aspect.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Table Talk. Pt. I, ser. 2.

² The loss of wealth is loss of dirt,
As sages in all times assert;
The happy man's without a shirt.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Be Merry, Friends.

I hold him rich, al had he not a shirt.

CHAUCER, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 330.

³ Who can sing so merry a note
As he that cannot change a groat?

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. I, ch. 12. (1546)

Rich men never whistle, poor men always do;
Bird-songs are in the hearts of the people.

STEPHEN B. ELKINS, Speech, 1906.

⁴ Wrapped in my virtue, I woo honest Poverty, undowered though she be. (Virtute me involve probamque Pauperiem sine dote quero.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iii, ode, 29, l. 55.

Content with poverty, my soul I arm;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm.

HORACE, Odes, iii, 29, 55. (Dryden, tr.)

⁵ Yes! in the poor man's garden grow,
Far more than herbs and flowers,
Kind thoughts, contentment, peace of mind,
And joy for weary hours.

MARY HOWITT, The Poor Man's Garden.

Cultivate poverty like a garden herb, sage.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden: Conclusion.

⁶ The penniless traveler may sing before thieves. (Cantabit vacuus coram latrone via-tor.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 22.

The traveller, freighted with a little wealth, Sets forth at night, and makes his way by stealth; . . .

While, void of care, the beggar trips along,
And, in the spoiler's presence, trolls his song.

JUVENAL, Satires, x. (Gifford, tr.)

If you are empty-handed, the highwayman passes you by; even along an infested road, the poor travel in peace. (Nudum latro transmittit; etiam in obsessa via pauperi pax est.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epist. xiv, 10.

A poor man, that beareth no riches on him by the way, may boldly sing before thieves.

CHAUCER, Boethius. Bk. ii, prose 5.

The poor man before the thief doth sing.

JOHN LYCATE, Fall of Princes. Bk. iii, l. 582.

¹⁵ By breathing in content
The keen, the wholesome, air of poverty,
And drinking from the well of homely life.

WORDSWORTH, The Excursion. Bk. i, l. 306.

¹⁶ No man should commend poverty but he who is poor. (Nemo paupertatem commen-daret nisi pauper.)

ST. BERNARD, Sermons.

He must have a great deal of godliness who can find any satisfaction in being poor.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 44.

'Tis mighty easy, o'er a glass of wine,
On vain refinements vainly to refine,
To laugh at poverty in plenty's reign,
To boast of apathy when out of pain.

VI—Poverty and Riches

² The rich feast, the poor fast;
The dogs dine, the poor pine.

THOMAS ADAMS, Works, p. 39. (1630)

³ Poverty is an anomaly to rich people. It is very difficult to make out why people who want dinner do not ring the bell.

BACHELOT, Literary Studies. Vol. II, p. 160.

At length I recollected the thoughtless saying of a great princess, who, on being informed that the country people had no bread, replied, "Then let them eat cake." (Enfin je me rappelai le pis-aller d'une grande princesse à qui l'on disait que les paysans n'avaient pas de pain, et qui répondit:
"Qu'ils mangent de la brioche.")

JEAN-JACQUES ROUSSEAU, Confessions. Bk. vi, ninth paragraph from end. Usually attributed to Marie Antoinette, after her arrival in France in 1770, but the sixth book of the Confessions was written two or three years before that date. It is difficult to translate "brioche," which is not exactly cake, but a bun or fancy bread something like Scotch scones.

Marie Antoinette made only one mistake. She should have said, "Let them eat hokum."

The nakedness of the indigent world may be clothed from the trimmings of the vain.

GOLDSMITH, The Vicar of Wakefield. Ch. 4.

¹² Poverty breeds wealth; and wealth in its turn breeds poverty. The earth, to form the mould, is taken out of the ditch; and whatever may be the height of the one will be the depth of the other.

J. C. AND A. W. HARE, Guesses at Truth.

¹³ The greatest luxury of riches is, that they enable you to escape so much good advice.
The rich are always advising the poor, but the poor seldom venture to return the compliment.

Sir ARTHUR HALLS, Brevia.

¹⁴ God could have made all rich, or all men
poor;

But why He did not, let me tell wherefore:
Had all been rich, where then had Patience been?

Had all been poor, who had His Bounty seen?

ROBERT HERRICK, Riches and Poverty.

¹⁵ Two of a thousand things are disallow'd,
A lying rich man, and a poor man proud.

ROBERT HERRICK, Two Things Odious.

¹⁶ My soul . . . will not own a notion so unholy,
As thinking that the rich by easy trips
May go to heav'n, whereas the poor and lowly
Must work their passage, as they do in ships.

THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Rae Wilson, l. 129.

¹⁷ Stitch! stitch! stitch!

⁴ Poor and content is rich and rich enough,
But riches fineless is as poor as winter
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 172.

The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then be not poor, but break it.

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet. Act v, sc. 1, l. 73.

⁵ For often evil men are rich, and good men
poor;

But we will not exchange with them
Our virtue for their wealth, since one abides always,

While riches change their owners every day.
SOLON, Fragments. Frag. 15. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Solon. Sec. 3.)

POWER

⁹ I am more and more convinced that man is a dangerous creature; and that power, whether vested in many or a few, is ever grasping, and like the grave, cries "Give, give!"

ABIGAIL ADAMS, Letter to Her Husband, 27 Nov., 1775.

¹⁰ Give me a lever long enough, and a fulcrum strong enough, and single-handed I can move the world.

ARCHIMEDES OF SYRACUSE. (PAPPUS ALEXANDER, Collectio, viii, 10; PLINY, Historia Naturalis, vii, 37.) Sometimes quoted: "Give me where to stand and I will move the world," or "Give me a base and I will move the world."

If there were another world, and I could go to it, I could move this.

ARCHIMEDES. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Marcellus. Ch. 14, sec. 1.)

Don't talk to me of your Archimedes' lever. . . . Give me the right word and the right accent and I will move the world.

JOSEPH CONRAD, A Personal Record: Preface.

¹¹ The seeds of godlike power are in us still: Gods are we, Bards, Saints, Heroes, if we will.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Written in Emerson's Essays.

¹² It is the solecism of power, to think to command the end, and yet not to endure the mean.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Empire.

It is a strange desire, to seek power, and to lose liberty; or to seek power over others, and to lose power over a man's self.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Great Place.

¹³ He hath no power that hath not power to use.
P. J. BAILEY, Festus: A Visit.

¹⁴ Energy is Eternal Delight.

¹⁵ Then wakes the power which in the age of iron
Burst forth to curb the great and raise the low.
BULWER-LYTTON, Richelieu. Act iv, sc. 2.

¹⁶ The greater the power the more dangerous the abuse.

EOMUNO BURKE, Speech, House of Commons, 7 Feb., 1771.

Power gradually extirpates from the mind every humane and gentle virtue.

BURKE, A Vindication of Natural Society.

¹⁷ Dim with the mist of years, grey fits the shade of power.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto II, st. 2.

¹ Power is so far from being desirable in itself, that it sometimes ought to be refused, and sometimes to be resigned.

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 20, sec. 68.

Next to the assumption of power was the responsibility of relinquishing it.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, House of Commons, 27 May, 1841.

² By his own prowess. (Suo Marte.)

CICERO, Philippicæ. No. ii, ch. 37, sec. 95.

³ To know the pains of power, we must go to those who have it; to know its pleasures, we must go to those who are seeking it: the pains of power are real, its pleasures imaginary.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. i, No. 427.

You shall have joy, or you shall have power, said God; you shall not have both.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. vi, p. 282.

What is grandeur, what is power?
Heavier toil, superior pain.

THOMAS GRAY, Ode for Music, l. 57.

I have never been able to conceive how any rational being could propose happiness to himself from the exercise of power over others.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. xiii, p. 18.

Power, like a desolating pestilence,
Pollutes whate'er it touches.

SHELLEY, Queen Mab. Canto iii, l. 176.

8 Power is always passing to the best man from the hands of his inferior. (Imperium semper ad optimum quemque a minus bono transfertur.)

SALLUST, Catiline. Sec. 2.

Power is always gradually stealing away from the many to the few, because the few are more vigilant and consistent.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Adventurer, No. 45.

Power is ever stealing from the many to the few.
WENDELL PHILLIPS, Address: Public Opinion,
Boston, 28 Jan., 1852.

9 Power is easily retained by the qualities by which it was first won. (Imperium facile eis artibus retinetur quibus initio partum est.)

SALLUST, Catiline. Sec. 2.

Power is more certainly retained by wary measures than by daring counsels. (Potentium cautis quam acribus consiliis tutius haberi.)

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. xi, sec. 29.

10 Power on an ancient consecrated throne,
Strong in possession, founded in old custom;
Power by a thousand tough and stringy roots
Fixed to the people's pious nursery-faith.

SCHILLER, Wallenstein. Act iv, sc. 4. (Coleridge, tr.)

11 The Monarch drank, that happy hour,
The sweetest, holiest draught of Power.

SENECA, Hippolytus, l. 215.

14 No pent-up Utica contracts your powers,
But the whole boundless continent is yours.

JONATHAN MITCHELL SEWALL, Prologue to Addison's "Cato." Written for a performance of the play at the Bow Street Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H. Sewall is drawing a parallel between the events of the American Revolution and those of the play, in which (Act i, sc. 1) occur the words, "But what can Cato do . . . Pent up in Utica?" Park Benjamin adopted the couplet as the motto of his paper, The New World.

15 The awful shadow of some unseen Power
Floats, tho' unseen, amongst us.

I—Praise: Definitions

BROADHURST [?], To the Celebrated Beauties of the British Court. (BELL, Fugitive Poetry. Vol. III, p. 118.)

When one good line did once my wonder raise
In Br——'s works, I stood resolv'd to praise,
And had, but that the modest author cries,
"Praise undeserv'd is satire in disguise."

UNKNOWN, On a Certain Line of Mr. Br——.
(The Garland, London, 1721.) This epigram, which was signed B., is the only clue to the author of this famous line. It is assumed that the name was Broadhurst.

Praise undeserv'd is scandal in disguise.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. II, epis. 1, l. 413. (1733) Pope encloses the line in quotation marks.

Why, praise is satire in these sinful days.

PAUL WHITEHEAD, Manners.

Praise is rebuke to the man whose conscience alloweth it not.

M. F. TUPPER, Proverbial Philosophy: Of Commendation.

² Praise is but the shadow of virtue.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Remains. Vol. II, p. 118.

³ Praises of the unworthy are felt by ardent minds as robberies of the deserving.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Biographia Literaria. Ch. 3.

⁴ It is as great a spite to be praised in the wrong place, and by a wrong person, as can be done to a noble nature.

BEN JONSON, Explorata: Non Vulgi Sunt.

Praise that stings like shame.

SWINBURNE, In Sepulchrets. St. 1.

⁵ Be silent, Praise,
Blind guide with siren voice, and blinding all
That hear thy call.

JOHN KEBLE, The Christian Year: Wednesday before Easter.

⁶ All praise is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, and comes not to the heart.

WILLIAM MASON, Musans.

⁷ Among the smaller duties of life I hardly know any one more important than that of not praising where praise is not due.

SYDNEY SMITH, Sketches of Moral Philosophy. Lecture 9.

⁸ The art of praising began the art of pleasing. (L'art de louer commença l'art de plaire.)
VOLTAIRE, La Pucelle, Chant XX.

I now perceived . . .

That we are praised, only as men in us
Do recognise some image of themselves,
An abject counterpart of what they are,
Or the empty thing that they would wish to be.

WORDSWORTH, The Borderers. Act IV, l. 1822.

II—Praise: Apothegms

¹⁰ Praise is deeper than the lips.

ROBERT BROWNING, Herod Riel. St. 9.

prais'd

God and his works.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. vii, l. 258.

¹⁶ I am deaf with praises, and all dazed with flowers.

STEPHEN PHILLIPS, Herod. Act I.

¹⁷ Poetic Justice, with her lifted scale,

Where, in nice balance, truth with gold she weighs,

And solid pudding against empty praise.

POPE, The Dunciad. Bk. I, l. 52.

¹⁸ Be thou the first true merit to befriend;

His praise is lost who stays till all commend.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. II, l. 274.

¹⁹ Forbear to mention what thou canst not praise.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Carmen Seculare, l. 106.

What woman can resist the force of praise?
JOHN GAY, Trivia. Bk. i, l. 260.

Beauty's elixir vite, praise.

CONVENTRY PATMORE, The Angel in the House:
Bk. II, Prologue.

Delightful praise!—like summer rose,
That brighter in the dew-drop glows,
The dashing maiden's cheek appear'd.
SCOTT, The Lady of the Lake. Canto II, st. 24.

When all the world conspires to praise her,
The woman's deaf and does not hear.
POPE, On a Certain Lady at Court.

The sweeter sound of woman's praise.

MACAULAY, Lines Written on the Night of 30th of July, 1847.

¹¹
Of praise a mere glutton, he swallow'd what came,
And the puff of a dunce, he mistook it for fame;

Till his relish grown callous, almost to displease,
Who pepper'd the highest was surest to please.

GOLDSMITH, Retaliation, l. 109. Referring to David Garrick

¹²
Do you swell with the love of praise? (Laudis amore tumes?)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. I, l. 36.

So light and so small a thing it is which casts down or restores a mind greedy of praise. (Sic leve, sic parvum est, animum quod laudis ava-rum Subruit ac reficit.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 1, l. 179.

¹⁶
We are apt to love praise, but not to deserve it. But if we would deserve it, we must love virtue more than that.

WILLIAM PENN, Fruits of Solitude.

¹⁷
To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urged thro' sacred lust of praise!
POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. ii, l. 320.

Itch of vulgar praise.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. i, l. 60.

Whose Ruling Passion was the lust of praise.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. i, l. 181.

His passion still, to covet gen'ral praise,
His life, to forfeit it a thousand ways.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. i, l. 196.

¹⁸
The greatest efforts of the race have always been traceable to the love of praise, as its greatest catastrophes to the love of pleasure.
JOHN RUSKIN, Sesame and Lilies. Sec. I, 3.

¹⁹
Praises, of whose taste the wise are fond.
SHAKESPEARE, Richard II. Act II, sc. 1, l. 11.

1 Cram 's with praise, and make 's
As fat as tame things: one good deed, dying tongueless,
Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that.
Our praises are our wages.

SHAKESPEARE, Winter's Tale. Act 1, sc. 2, l. 91.
Farewell, Bristol's dingy piles of brick,
Lovers of mammon, worshippers of trick!
Ye spurned the boy who gave you antique lays,
And paid for learning with your empty praise.
THOMAS CHATTERTON, Last Verses.

2 He who loves praise loves temptation.
THOMAS WILSON, Maxims of Piety, p. 114.

3 The most pleasing of all sounds, that of your own praise. ("Ἡδύτατος ἀκουσμός τῶν αἰσθημάτων.") XENOPHON, Hiero. Ch. 1, sec. 14.

4 The love of praise, howe'er concealed by art,
Reigns, more or less, and glows, in ev'ry heart:

*The proud, to gain it, toils on toils endure;
The modest shun it, but to make it sure.
YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. i, l. 51.
As love of pleasure into pain betrays,
So most grow infamous through love of praise.
YOUNG, To the Right Hon. Mr. Dodington.

IV—Praise of the Living

5 Every one that has been long dead has a due proportion of praise allotted him, in which, whilst he lived, his friends were too profuse and his enemies too sparing.

ADDISON, The Spectator. No. 101.
To hear the world applaud the hollow ghost
Which blamed the living man.
MATTHEW ARNOLD, Growing Old.

6 Him who ne'er listen'd to the voice of praise,
The silence of neglect can ne'er appall.

JAMES BEATTIE, The Minstrel. Bk. i, st. 2.
And hearts that once beat high for praise
Now feel that pulse no more.

THOMAS MOORE, The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Halls.

Praise cannot wound his generous spirit now.

SAMUEL ROGERS, Voyage of Columbus.
Canto 1.

They have their passing paragraphs of praise,
And are forgotten.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, The Victory, l. 9.

7 The pathway of the living we can beautify and grace;

We can line it deep with roses and make earth a happier place.

But we've done all mortals can do, when our prayers are softly said

For the souls of those who travel o'er the pathway of the dead.

EDGAR GUEST, The Pathway of the Living.

8 Don't strew me with roses after I'm dead.
When Death claims the light of my brow,
No flowers of life will cheer me: instead

You may give me my roses now!
THOMAS F. HEALEY, Give Me My Roses Now.

A rose to the living is more
Than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.
NIXON WATERMAN, A Rose to the Living.

9 Then wherefore waste the rose's bloom
Upon the cold, insensate tomb?
Can flowery breeze, or odour's breath,
Affect the still, cold sense of death?
Oh no; I ask no balm to steep
With fragrant tears my bed of sleep:
But now, while every pulse is glowing,
Now let me breathe the balsam flowing.

THOMAS MOORE, Odes of Anacreon, Ode xxxii.

10 And so I charge ye, by the thorny crown,
And by the cross on which the Saviour
bled,

And by your own soul's hope of fair renown,
Let something good be said.

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, Let Something Good Be Said.

11 Oh, friends! I pray to-night,
Keep not your roses for my dead, cold brow:
The way is lonely, let me feel them now.

ARABELLA EUGENIA SMITH, *If I Should Die
To-night*. Erroneously attributed to Robert
C. V. Myers, Alice Cary and Abram J. Ryan.
Claimed without foundation by Irvine Dungan. (See STEVENSON, Famous Single Poems.)

If I should die to-night,
And you should come in deepest grief and woe,
And say, "Here's that ten dollars that I owe,"
I might arise in my large white cravat
And say, "What's that?" . . .
But I'd drop dead again!

BEN KING, If I Should Die To-night.

12 Closed eyes can't see the white roses;
Cold hands can't hold them, you know!
Breath that is stilled can not gather
The odors that sweet from them blow.
Death, with a peace beyond dreaming
Its children of earth doth endow;
Life is the time we can help them—
So give them the flowers now!

UNKNOWN, Give Them the Flowers Now.

Bring me all your flowers to-day—
Whether pink, or white, or red;
I'd rather have one blossom now
Than a truckload when I'm dead.
UNKNOWN, Kindness During Life.

13 Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and tenderness sealed up until your friends are dead. . . . Fill their lives with sweetness. . . . Postmortem kindness does not cheer the burdened spirit. Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward over the weary way.

UNKNOWN, The Alabaster Boxes, attributed to Warren P. Lovett, George W. Childs, Ben Selling, and others.

V—Praise of Gods and Men

¹ The praise of so mean a creature was degrading to me. (Quæ quidem conlaudatio hominis turpissimi mihi ipsi erat pæne turpis.)

I am pleased to be praised by a man whom every one praises. (Lætus sum laudari a laudato viro.)

CICERO, Epistolæ ad Familiares. Bk. v, epis. 12.

It is not the least praise to have pleased distinguished men. (Principibus placuisse viris non ultima laus est.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 17, l. 35.

A word or nod from a good man is worth more than a thousand arguments from others.

PLUTARCH, Lives: Phocion. Ch. 5, sec. 4.

¹² Praise, the fine diet which we're apt to love, If given to excess, does hurtful prove.

JOHN OLDHAM, A Letter from the Country to a Friend in Town.

Praise is like ambergris: a little whiff of it, and by snatches, is very agreeable; but when a man holds a whole lump of it to your nose, it is a stink, and strikes you down.

POPE, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

¹³ And make her chronicle as rich with praise As is the ooze and bottom of the sea With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act i, sc. 2, l. 163.

¹⁴ To you! to you! all song of praise is due; Only in you my song begins and endeth.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Astrophel and Stella: First Song.

And round thee with the breeze of song To stir a little dust of praise.

TENNYSON, In Memoriam. Pt. lxxv.

¹⁵ On him and on his high endeavour The light of praise shall shine for ever.

WORDSWORTH, The White Doe of Rylstone. Canto v, l. 1214.

VI—Praise and Blame

¹⁶ For if it be but half-denied, 'Tis half as good as justified.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. iii, canto ii, l. 803.

¹⁷ Teasing with blame, excruciating with praise.

BYRON, Beppo. St. 74.

¹⁸ I praise loudly, I blame softly.

CATHERINE II OF RUSSIA, Memoirs.

COWPER, Letter to Mr. Newton.

² This misery those dreary souls sustain
Who passed their lives without or praise or blame. (Questo misero modo
Tengon l'anime triste di coloro,
Che visser senza infamia e senza lodo.)
DANTE, Inferno, Canto iii, l. 34.

Now God bless all true workers, let us pray:
The night-time cometh when we all must rest:
Strive we, and do, lest by-and-by we sit
In that blind life to which all other fate
Is cause for envy; with the naked souls
Who never lived, knowing nor praise nor blame,
But kept themselves in mean neutrality,
Hateful alike to God and to His foes.

EMILY HENRIETTA HICKEY, Michael Villiers, Idealist.

³ It is more shameful to be praised faintly and coldly than to be censured violently and severely. For the man who reviles is regarded as unjust and hostile, but one who praises faintly is regarded as a friend, who would like to praise but can find nothing to commend.

FAVORINUS. (AULUS GELLIUS, Noctes Atticæ.
Bk. xix, ch. 3, sec. 1.)

When needs he must, yet faintly then he praises;
Somewhat the deed, much more the means he raises:

So marreth what he makes, and praising most,
dispraises.

PHINEAS FLETCHER, The Purple Island. Canto
vii, st. 67.

Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And, without sneering, teach the rest to sneer.
POPE, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, l. 201.

Well, well, is a word of malice.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

With faint praises one another damn.
WYCHERLEY, The Plain-Dealer: Prologue, l. 6.

⁴ He that praiseth publicly will slander privately.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2250.

⁵ Praise from a friend, or censure from a foe,
Are lost on hearers that our merits know.
HOMER, Iliad. Bk. x, l. 293. (Pope, tr.)

⁶ Cold Approbation gave the lingering bays,
For those who durst not censure, scarce could praise.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Prologue at the Opening of the Drury Lane Theatre, l. 13.

⁷ Few are wise enough to prefer useful reproof to treacherous praise. (Peu de gens sont assez sages pour préférer le blâme qui leur est utile à la louange qui les trahit.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 147.

There are reproaches which praise and praises which reproach. (Il y a des reproches qui louent et des louanges qui médisent.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 148.

We blame or praise most things merely because it is the fashion. (On loue et on blâme la plupart des choses parce que c'est la mode de les louer ou de les blâmer.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes Posthumes. No.
533.

⁸ Be sparing in praising and more so in blaming. (Parum lauda, vitupera parcius.)

WILLIAM LANGLAND, Piers Plowman. Quoted.

⁹ A man's accusations of himself are always believed, his praises never.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. iii, ch. 8.

¹⁰ Fear not the anger of the wise to raise;
Those best can bear reproof who merit praise.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. iii, l. 23.

¹¹ Such is the mode of these censorious days,
The art is lost of knowing how to praise.

JOHN SHEPHERD, On Mr. Hobbes, l. 1.

Law*: Epilogue.

¹⁷ He whose own worth doth speak, need not speak his own worth.

THOMAS FULLER, The Holy State, p. 147.

Neither praise nor dispraise thyself, thy actions serve the turn.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

¹ All censure of a man's self is oblique praise.
... It has all the invidiousness of self-praise, and all the reproach of falsehood.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (Boswell, Life, 1778.)

One prefers to speak evil of himself rather than not speak of himself at all. (On aime mieux dire du mal de soi-même que de n'en point parler.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 138.

² You are pretty,—we know it; and young,—it is true; and rich,—who can deny it? But when you praise yourself extravagantly, Fabulla, you appear neither rich, nor pretty, nor young.

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. I, ep. 64.

³ What would have been a great source of honor if another had related it, becomes nothing when the doer relates it himself. (Quod magnificum referente alio fuisset, ipso, qui gesserat, recensente vanescit.)

¹⁰ The trumpet of his own virtues.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act V, sc. 2, l. 87. (1598)

Or I should not blush so often as I do, by blowing the trumpet of my own praise.

THOMAS KNOTT, Turnpike Gate. Act I, sc. 1. (1799)

If you wish in this world to advance
Your merits you're bound to enhance;

You must stir it and stomp it,
And blow your own trumpet.

Or, trust me, you haven't a chance.

PRAYER

I—Prayer: Definitions

¹³ Prayer is the spirit speaking truth to Truth.
P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Elsewhere.

Truth is what prays in man, and a man is continually at prayer when he lives according to truth.

SWEDENBORG, Apocalypse Explained, p. 453.

¹⁴ This is that incense of the heart,
Whose fragrance smells to Heaven.

NATHANIEL COTTON, The Fireside. St. 11.

¹⁵ Prayer is the little implement
Through which men reach
Where presence is denied them.

EMILY DICKINSON, Poems. Pt. I, No. 80.

¹⁶ Ejaculations are short prayers darted up to God on emergent occasions.

THOMAS FULLER, Good Thoughts in Bad Times. Sec. v.

¹⁷ Prayer should be the key of the day and the lock of the night.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 3927.

¹⁸ Prayers and Praises are those spotless two Lambs, by the Law, which God requires as due.

ROBERT HERRICK, God's Part.

WORDSWORTH, The Excursion. Bk. I, l. 216.

¹⁹ A single grateful thought towards heaven is the most complete prayer.

LESSING, Minna von Barnhelm. Act II, sc. 7.

²⁰ Prayer is a strong wall and fortress of the church; it is a goodly Christian's weapon.

LUTHER, Table Talk: Of Prayer.

²¹ Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed,

The motion of a hidden fire
That trambles in the breast.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear,
The upward glancing of an eye
When none but God is near.

JAMES MONTGOMERY, What Is Prayer?

Prayers, the sweet ambassadors to God,
The heralds to prepare a better life.
FRANCIS ROUS, Thule.

There is a bridge, whereof the span
Is rooted in the heart of man,
And reaches, without pile or rod,
Unto the Great White Throne of God.

Its traffic is in human sighs,
Fervently wafted to the skies;
'Tis the one pathway from Despair,
And it is called the Bridge of Prayer.
GILBERT THOMAS, The Unseen Bridge.

2 And Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees.

COWPER, Exhortation to Prayer.

3 The prayer of faith shall save the sick.

New Testament: James, v, 15.

The highest prayer is not one of faith merely; it is demonstration. Such prayer heals sickness, and must destroy sin and death.

MARY BAKER EDDY, Science and Health, p. 16.

4 He who fashions sacred images of gold or marble does not make them gods; he makes them such who prays to them. (Qui fingit sacros auro vel marmore vultus, Non facit ille deos: qui rogat, ille facit.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. viii, ep. 24, l. 5.

Who is this before whose presence idols tumble to the sod?

While he cries out—"Allah Akbar! and there is no god but God!"

WILLIAM R. WALLACE, El Amin: The Faithful.

4a Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith. Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall receive them.

New Testament: Mark, xi, 23, 24.

All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.

New Testament: Matthew, xxi, 22.

5 They who have steeped their souls in prayer
Can every anguish calmly bear.

RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, Sayings of Rabia.

6 But that from usought should ascend to Heav'n
So prevalent as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd, or to incline His will,
Hard to belief may seem; yet this will Prayer.

10 More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of.

TENNYSON, Morte d'Arthur, l. 247.

11 Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take!
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!

RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, Prayer.

Time spent on the knees in prayer will do more to remedy heart strain and nerve worry than anything else.

GEORGE DAVID STEWART, Lecture, to his students at New York University.

12 Glory be unto her whose word
Sends her dear lord to bitter fight;

Although he conquer by his sword,

She to the praise has equal right;

He with the sword in battle, she at home
with prayer,

Both win the victory, and both the glory share.

IV—Prayer: The Good Prayer

16 Know that thou art freed from all desires when thou hast reached such a point that thou prayest to God for nothing except what thou canst pray for openly. (Tunc scito esse te omnibus cupiditatibus solutum, cum eo perveneris, ut nihil deum roges, nisi quod rogare possis palam.)

ATHENAGORUS, Fragment: De Superstitione.
(SENECA, Epistula ad Lucilium. Epis. x, 5.)

Prayers all men may hear. (Aperto vivere voto.)
PERSIUS, Satires. Sat. ii, l. 7.

Live among men as if God beheld you; speak with God as if men were listening. (Sic vive cum hominibus, tamquam deus videret; sic loquere cum deo, tamquam homines audiant.)

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucilium. Epis. x, sec. 5.

One way they look, another way they steer,
Pray to the gods, but would have mortals hear.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. i, l. 73.

Whoso will pray, he must fast and be clean,
And fat his soul, and make his body lean.

CHAUCER, The Somnours Tale, l. 171.

He prayeth well who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast.
He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all.

S. T. COLERIDGE, The Ancient Mariner. Pt. vii.

The prayer of the farmer kneeling in his field to weed it, the prayer of the rower kneeling with the stroke of his oar, are true prayers heard throughout nature.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Self-Reliance.

To pray . . . is to desire; but it is to desire what God would have us desire. He who desires not from the bottom of his heart, offers a deceitful prayer.

FENELON, Advice Concerning Prayer.

So a good prayer, though often used, is still fresh and fair in the ears and eyes of Heaven.

THOMAS FULLER, Good Thoughts. Sec. xii.

Thou canst not pray to God without praying to Love, but mayest pray to Love without praying to God.

RICHARD GARNETT, De Flagello Myrteo, xiii.

In prayer the lips ne'er act the winning part
Without the sweet concurrence of the heart.

ROBERT HERRICK, The Heart.

And, when I pray, my heart is in my prayer.
LONGFELLOW, Giles Corey. Act ii, sc. 3.

My prayers

Are not words duly bellow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers and wishes

Are all I can return.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 67.

A man can pray unbidden from a hassock,
And, passing by the customary cassock,

Kneel down remote upon the simple sod,
And sue in forma pauperis to God.

THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Rae Wilson, l. 206.

Thus she stood amid the stooks,
Praising God with sweetest looks.

THOMAS HOOD, Ruth.

You should pray for a sound mind in a sound body; for a stout heart that has no fear of death. (Orandum est ut sit mens sana in corpore sano; Fortem posce animum mortis terrore carentem.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 356.

Pray for a sound mind and for good health, first of soul and then of body. . . . Call boldly upon God; you will not be asking him for that which belongs to another.

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucilium. Epis. x, sec. 4.

Let our unceasing, earnest prayer
Be, too, for light,—for strength to bear
Our portion of the weight of care,
That crushes into dumb despair
One half the human race.

LONGFELLOW, The Goblet of Life. St. 10.

O, do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks.

PHILLIPS BROOKS, Going Up to Jerusalem.
(In Visions and Tasks, p. 330.)

Full on this casement shone the wintry moon,
And threw warm gules on Madeline's fair breast,
As down she knelt for heaven's grace and boon;
Rose-bloom fell on her hands, together prest,
And on her silver cross soft amethyst,
And on her hair a glory, like a saint:
She seemed a splendid angel, newly drest,
Save wings, for heaven.

KEATS, The Eve of St. Agnes. St. 25.

In all thou dost first let thy Prayers ascend,
And to the Gods thy Labours first commend,
From them implore Success, and hope a prosperous End.

PYTHAGORAS, Golden Verses, l. 49. (DACCIA, Life of Pythagoras.)

It may never be mine,
The loaf or the kiss or the kingdom
Because of beseeching;
But I know that my hand
Is an arm's length nearer the sky
For reaching.

3 The prayers of Abel linked to deeds of Cain.
BYRON, The Island. Canto ii, st. 4.

4 Two went to pray? O, rather say,
One went to brag, the other to pray;
One stands up close and treads on high,
Where the other dares not lend his eye;
One nearer to God's altar trod,
The other to the altar's God.

RICHARD CRASHAW, Two Went Up to the Temple to Pray.

Prayer: that craves a particular commodity, anything less than all good, is vicious. . . . Prayer as a means to a private end is meanness and theft.
EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Self-Reliance.

5 He who prays without confidence cannot hope that his prayers will be granted.
FÉNELON, Maximes: On Prayer.

6 God He rejects all Prayers that are slight,
And want their poise: words ought to have their weight.

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. xcv, 1.

We often want one thing and pray for another, not telling the truth even to the gods. (Sæpe aliud volumus, aliud optamus et verum ne dis quidem dicimus.)

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. xcv, 2. What we seek we shall find; what we flee from flees from us; as Goethe said, "What we wish for in youth, comes in heaps on us in old age," too often cursed with the granting of our prayer; and hence the high caution, that, since we are sure of having what we wish, we beware to ask only for high things.

When Prayer is of no avail?

WORDSWORTH, The Force of Prayer. St. 1.

VI—Prayer: Answered Prayer

19 Long tarries destiny, but comes to those who pray. (Τὰ μέγιστα μὲν ὀΐεται, ἐντυχνοῖσι δὲ ἔλθει.)

ÆSCHYLUS, Chæphoræ, l. 464. (Plumptre, tr.)

20 God answers sharp and sudden on some prayers,

And thrusts the thing we have prayed for in our face,

A gauntlet with a gift in 't.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. ii, l. 932.

She knows omnipotence has heard her prayer
And cries, "It shall be done—sometime, somewhere."

OPHELIA G. BROWNING, Unanswered.

They never sought in vain that sought the Lord aright!

BURNS, The Cotter's Saturday Night, St. 6.

A generous prayer is never presented in vain.

R. L. STEVENSON, The Merry Men.

But this she knows, in joys and woes,
That saints will aid if men will call;
For the blue sky bends over all!

S. T. COLERIDGE, Christabel: Pt. i, Conclusion.

Our vows are heard betimes! and Heaven takes care

To grant, before we can conclude the pray'r:
Preventing angels met it half the way,
And sent us back to praise, who came to pray.

DRYDEN, Britannia Rediviva, l. 1.

Grant folly's prayers that hinder folly's wish,
And serve the ends of wisdom.

GEORGE ELIOT, The Spanish Gypsy, Bk. iv.

God, who's in Heav'n, will hear from thence,
If not to th' sound, yet to the sense.

ROBERT HERRICK, God Hears Us.

Who hearkens to the gods, the gods give ear.
HOMER, Iliad, Bk. i, l. 280. (Bryant, tr.)

A god when angry is moved by the voice of prayer. (Flectitur iratus voce rogante deus.)

OVIO, Art Amatoria, Bk. i, l. 442.

So spake he in prayer, and Zeus, the counselor, heard him, and a part the Father granted him, and a part denied.

HOMER, Iliad, Bk. xvi, l. 249.

As half the prayer wi' Phœbus grace did find
And t'other half he whistled down the wind.
(Audit et voti Phœbus succedere partem Mente dedit, partem volueris dispersit in auras.)

VERGIL, Æneid, Bk. xi, l. 794. (Scott, tr., Waverley, Ch. 43.)

Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask Him.

NEW TESTAMENT: Matthew, vi, 8.

Leave it to the gods to decide what is best for us and most suitable to our circumstances. (Permittes ipsa expendere numinibus quid Conveniat nobis rebusque sit utile nostris.)

JUVENAL, Satires, Sat. x, l. 347.

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

NEW TESTAMENT: Matthew, vii, 7.

Every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth.

NEW TESTAMENT: Matthew, vii, 8.

Who rises from Prayer a better man, his prayer is answered.

GEORGE MEREDITH, *The Ordeal of Richard
Feverel*, Ch. 12.

My debts are large, my failures great, my shame secret and heavy; yet when I come to ask for my good, I quake in fear lest my prayer be granted.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE, Gitanjali, No. 28.

I have never made but one prayer to God,
a very short one: "O Lord, make my enemies ridiculous." And God granted it.

VOLTAIRE, Letter to M. Damilville, 16 May, 1767.

When the gods wish to punish us they answer
our prayers.

OSCAR WILDE, An Ideal Husband, Act ii.

Prayer must never be answered: if it is, it ceases to be prayer and becomes a correspondence.

OSCAR WILDE, Remark, to Laurence Housman.

VII—Prayer: Unanswered Prayer

Of course I prayed—

And did God care?

He cared as much

As on the air

A bird had stamped her foot

And cried "Give me!"

EMILY DICKINSON, Poems, Pt. v, No. 38.

Is there never a chink in the world above
Where they listen for words from below?

JEAN INGELOW, Supper at the Mill: The Mother's Song.

If by prayer
Incessant I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries:
But prayer against his absolute decree
No more avails than breath against the wind, Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth:

Therefore to his great bidding I submit.

MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. xi, l. 307.

O sad estate
Of human wretchedness; so weak is man,
So ignorant and blind, that did not God
Sometimes withhold in mercy what we ask,
We should be ruined at our own request.

HANNAH MORE, Moses in the Bushes, Pt. 1.

We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers

Deny us for our good; so find we profit
By losing of our prayers.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act ii,
sc. 1, l. 5.

Who finds not Providence all good and wise,
Alike in what it gives, and what denies?

POPE, Essay on Man. Epis. i, l. 205.

Good when he gives, supremely good,
Nor less when he denies,
E'en crosses from his sovereign hand
Are blessings in disguise.

JAMES HERVEY, Hymns.

VIII—Prayer: Praying

1 A child may say amen
To a bishop's prayer, and feel the way it goes.
E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. ii, l. 337.

2 Ave Maria! 'tis the hour of prayer!
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto iii, st. 103.

'Twas the hour when rites unholy
Called each Paynim voice to prayer.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Turkish Lady.

3 Father of Light! great God of Heaven!
Hear'st thou the accents of despair?
Can guilt like man's be e'er forgiven?
Can vice atone for crimes by prayer?
BYRON, The Prayer of Nature. St. 1.

4 O sweeter than the marriage-feast,
'Tis sweeter far to me,
To walk together to the kirk
With a goodly company:

To walk together to the kirk,
And all together pray,
While each to his great Father bends,
Old men, and babes, and loving friends
And youths and maidens gay.

S. T. COLERIDGE, The Ancient Mariner. Pt. vii.

5 White Captain of my soul, lead on;
I follow thee, come dark or dawn.
Only vouchsafe three things I crave:
Where terror stalks, help me be brave!
Where righteous ones can scarce endure
The siren call, help me be pure!
Where vows grow dim, and men dare do
What once they scorned, help me be true!
ROBERT FREEMAN, Prayer.

6 O Lord of Courage grave,
O Master of this night of Spring!
Make firm in me a heart too brave
To ask Thee anything.
JOHN GALSWORTHY, The Prayer.

7 Lord, dismiss us with thy blessing,
Hope, and comfort from above;
Let us each, thy peace possessing,
Triumph in redeeming love.
ROBERT HAWKER, Benediction.

8 Brightest and best of the sons of the morning,
Dawn on our darkness, and lend us thine aid.
REGINALD HEBER, Epiphany.

9 Father, I scarcely dare to pray,
So clear I see, now it is done,
How I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun.
HELEN HUNT JACKSON, A Last Prayer.

10 Abide with me from morn till eve,
For without Thee I cannot live;
Abide with me when night is nigh,
For without Thee I dare not die.
JOHN KEBLE, The Christian Year: Evening.

And help us, this and every day,
To live more nearly as we pray.
JOHN KEBLE, The Christian Year: Morning.

11 I kneel not now to pray that thou
Make white one single sin,—
I only kneel to thank thee, Lord,
For what I have not been.
HARRY KEMP, A Prayer.

12 I ask and wish not to appear
More beautiful, rich or gay:
Lord, make me wiser every year,
And better every day.
CHARLES LAMB, A Birthday Thought.

13 O Lord my God, I have trusted in thee;
O Jesu my dearest one, now set me free.
In prison's oppression, in sorrow's obsession,
I weary for thee.
With sighing and crying bowed down as dying,
I adore thee, I implore thee, set me free!
(O Domine Deus! speravi in te;
O care mi Jesu! nunc libera me.
In dura catena, in misera poëna,
Disidero te.
Languendo, jemendo, et genuflectendo,
Adoro, imploro, ut liberares me!)

MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS. Written in her Book of Devotion before her execution. (Swinburne, tr., Mary Stewart. Act v, sc. 1.)

14 When the last sea is sailed and the last shallow chartered,
When the last field is reaped and the last harvest stored,
When the last fire is out and the last guest departed,
Grant the last prayer that I shall pray, Be good to me, O Lord!

JOHN MASSEFIELD, D'Avalos' Prayer.

15 Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way,
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for—others.
CHARLES D. MERRIS, Others.

¹ Let not that happen which I wish, but that which is right. (Mē moi 'yēroid' & Boulaon' alla' & sunpōpa.)

MENANDER, Fragment.

Not what we wish, but what we want,
Oh! let thy grace supply,
The good unask'd, in mercy grant;
The ill, though ask'd, deny.

JAMES MERRICK, Hymn.

² As down in the sunless retreats of the Ocean,
Sweet flowers are springing no mortal can see,
So, deep in my soul the still prayer of devotion
Unheard by the world, rises silent to Thee.
MOORE, As Down in the Sunless Retreats.

^{2a} Socrates: O beloved Pan and all ye other gods of this place, grant to me that I be made beautiful in my soul within, and that all external possessions be in harmony with my inner man. May I consider the wise man rich; and may I have such wealth as only the self-restrained man can endure.—Do we need anything more, Phædrus? For me that prayer is enough. Phædrus: Let me also share in this prayer; for friends have all things in common. (Καὶ τὰς τὰ τῶν φίλων.)

PLATO, Phædrus. Conclusion. See under FRIEND.

I prayed the prayer of Plato old:
God make thee beautiful within,
And let thine eyes the good behold
In everything save sin!

J. G. WHITTIER, My Namesake. St. 43.

³ Without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers.

New Testament: Romans, i. 9.

Farewell! if ever fondest prayer
For other's weal avail'd on high,
Mine will not all be lost in air,
But waft thy name beyond the sky.

BYRON, Farewell! If Ever Fondest Prayer.

I would not exchange the prayer of the deceased [Mrs. Sheppard] in my behalf for the united glory of Homer, Cæsar, and Napoleon, could such be accumulated upon a living head.

BYRON, Letter to Mr. Sheppard. (MOORE, Life of Byron.)

Pray, sweet, for me, that I may be Faithful to God and thee.

EMILY HENRIETTA HICKEY, Beloved, It Is Morn.

Nymph, in thy orisons

Be all my sins remember'd.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 89.

⁴ Now that the sun is gleaming bright,
Implore we, bending low,
That He, the Uncreated Light,
May guide us as we go.

ADAM DE ST. VICTOR, Guide Us, Lord. A paraphrase of an old Latin hymn, sung at the death-bed of William the Conqueror.

⁵ Bow, stubborn knees; and, heart with strings of steel,

Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 70.

Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 77.

Now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 123.

⁶ His worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish that way; but nobody but has his fault.

SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 4, l. 13.

⁷ She prayed, that never prayed before.

SHAKESPEARE, Taming of the Shrew, iv, 1, 81.

⁸ Four things which are not in thy treasury, I lay before thee, Lord, with this petition:—
My nothingness, my wants,
My sins, and my contrition.

ROBERT SOUTHY, Occasional Pieces. No. 19.

⁹ Holy Father, in thy mercy,
Hear our anxious prayer.

Keep our loved ones, now far absent,
'Neath Thy care.

ISABELLA S. STEPHENSON, Hymn.

¹⁰ The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man, help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day, bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, Prayer.

¹¹ For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?

TENNYSON, Morte d'Arthur, l. 301.

¹² While Thee I seek, protecting Power,
Be my vain wishes stilled;

And may this consecrated hour

With better hopes be filled.

HELEN MARIA WILLIAMS, Trust in Providence.

¹³ If she, with those soft eyes in tears,
Day after day in her first years,

Must kneel and pray for grace from Thee,
What far, far deeper need have we!

How hardly, if she win not heaven,
Will our wild errors be forgiven!

NATHANIEL PARKES WILLIS, "Chamber Scene."

Ah! a seraph may pray for a sinner,

But a sinner must pray for himself.

CHARLES MONROE DICKINSON, The Children.

Her cushion's threadbare with her constant prayers.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Satire vi, l. 78.

¹⁴ I pray the prayer the Easterners do:

May the peace of Allah abide with you.
(Salaam Aleikum.)

UNKNOWN, Peace Be With You.

PREACHER AND PREACHING

I—Preacher: Definitions

1 For the preacher's merit or demerit,
It were to be wished the flaws were fewer
In the earthen vessel, holding treasure
Which lies as safe in a golden ewer;
But the main thing is, does it hold good measure?

Heaven soon sets right all other matters!

ROBERT BROWNING, Christmas-Eve. Pt. xxii.

I praise the heart, and pity the head of him,
And refer myself to Thee, instead of him.

ROBERT BROWNING, Christmas-Eve. Pt. xxii.

2 For his religion, it was fit
To match his learning and his wit:
Twas Presbyterian true blue;
For he was of that stubborn crew
Of errant saints, whom all men grant
To be the true Church Militant;
Such as do build their faith upon
The holy text of pike and gun;
Decide all controversies by Infallible artillery;

And prove their doctrine orthodox,
By Apostolic blows and knocks.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto 1, l. 189.

3 My profession is to keep secrets.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 1. It is a priest speaking.

4 Priests are extremely like other men, and neither the better or worse for wearing a gown or a surplice.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 10 May, 1748.

Vows can't change nature; priests are only men.

ROBERT BROWNING, The Ring and the Book. Pt. i, l. 1057.

All pastors are alike
To wand'ring sheep, resolv'd to follow none.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. vi, l. 390.

5 For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord: . . . But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.

New Testament: II Corinthians, iv, 5, 7.

Judge not the preacher; for he is thy Judge:
If thou mistak'st him, thou conceiv'st him not.
God call'st preaching folly. Do not grudge
To pick our treasures from an earthen pot.
The worst speak something good: if all want sense,

God takes a text, and preacheth patience.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church-Porch, St. 72.

6 He that negotiates between God and man,

As God's ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. ii, l. 463.

7 Alas for the unhappy man that is called to stand in the pulpit, and not give the bread of life.

EMERSON, Address to the Senior Class in Divinity College, Cambridge, 15 July, 1838.

8 The Clergy in this sense, of Divine Institution, that God hath made mankind so weak that it must be deceived.

LORD HALIFAX, Works, p. 221.

9 Even ministers of good things are like torches, a light to others, waste and destruction to themselves.

RICHARD HOOKER. Quoted as "that admirable saying," by Gladstone, in 1880. (MORLEY, Life of Gladstone. Bk. viii, ch. 1.)

10 What bishops like best in their clergy is a dropping-down-deadness of manner.

SYDNEY SMITH, First Letter to Archdeacon Singleton.

They admire the Vicar of Bray, whose principle was to be Vicar of Bray, whether the church was Protestant or Popish.

C. H. SPURGEON, John Ploughman. Ch. 18.

See also POLITICS: EXPERIENCY.

11 A genius in a reverend gown
Must ever keep its owner down;
'Tis an unnatural conjunction,
And spoils the credit of the function.

SWIFT, To Dr. Delany.

Now hear an allusion:—A mitre, you know,
Is divided above, but united below.

If this you consider, our emblem is right;
The bishops divide, but the clergy unite.

SWIFT, On the Irish Bishops.

12 I never saw, heard, nor read that the clergy were beloved in any nation where Christianity was the religion of the country. Nothing can render them popular but some degree of persecution.

SWIFT, Thoughts on Religion.

II—Preacher: Apothegms

13 The parson knows enough who knows a Duke.
COWPER, Tirocinium, l. 403.

14 Keeping our hearts warm and our heads cool, we clergy need do nothing emphatically.

DICKENS, Mystery of Edwin Drood. Ch. 16.

15 Taylor, the Shakespeare of divines?
His words are music in my ear,
I see his cowl'd portrait dear;
And yet, for all his faith could see,

I would not the good bishop be.
KESSESON, The Problem.

EDWARD FITZGERALD, telling Tennyson of the man to whom his sister was engaged. Tennyson seized upon the fact that the words made a line of blank verse, and aptly illustrated Wordsworth's weakest manner. (See BARNES, Life of Fitzgerald, p. 62.)

² To a philosophic eye the vices of the clergy are far less dangerous than their virtues.

GIBSON, Decline and Fall. Ch. 49.

³ It is by the Vicar's skirts that the Devil climbs into the Belfry.

LONGFELLOW, Spanish Student. Act I, sc. 2.

⁴ Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

Old Testament: 1 Chronicles, xvi, 22; Psalms, cv, 15. The text upon which "Benefit of Clergy" (Beneficium clericorum aut clericorum) was grounded. In England, the privilege was at first restricted to ecclesiastical places and persons, but in 1274 was extended to all persons who could read, and in 1691 to women. Such a person could not be put to death, but was branded on the hand. It was abolished in 1827. In America, the Congress passed an act in 1790 prohibiting benefit of clergy in any case of conviction of a capital crime.

Without Benefit of Clergy.

RUDYARD KIPPLING. Title of short story. Kipling used the phrase in the sense of unmarried.

When want of learning kept the laymen low,
And none but priests were authorit'd to know;
When what small knowledge was, in them did dwell;

And he a god, who could but read or spell.

JOHN DRYDEN, Religio Laici, l. 372.

⁵ A Curate—there is something which excites compassion in the very name of a Curate!

SYDNEY SMITH, Persecuting Bishops.

Ah me! I was a pale young curate then.

W. S. GILBERT, The Sorcerer. Act I.

The mildest curate going.

W. S. GILBERT, The Rival Curates.

The curate—he was fatter than his cure!

TENNISON, Edwin Morris, l. 15.

III—Preachers: Their Virtues

¹ I met a preacher there I knew, and said:
"Ill and o'erwork'd, how fare you in this scene?"

"Bravely!" said he; "for I of late have been Much cheer'd with thoughts of Christ, the living bread."

MATTHEW ARNOLO, East London.

⁷ I venerate the man whose heart is warm, Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life,

Coincident, exhibit lucid proof
That he is honest in the sacred cause.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. II, l. 372.

Would I describe a preacher, . . .

I would express him simple, grave, sincere;
In doctrine uncorrupt; in language plain,
And plain in manner; decent, solemn, chaste,
And natural in gesture; much impress'd
Himself, as conscious of his awful charge,
And anxious mainly that the flock he feeds
May feel it too; affectionate in look,
And tender in address, as well becomes
A messenger of grace to guilty men.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. II, l. 394.

⁸ There, where a few torn shrubs the place disclose,

The village preacher's modest mansion rose.
A man he was to all the country dear,
And passing rich with forty pounds a year;
Remote from towns he ran his godly race,
Nor e'er had chang'd, nor wished to change,
his place.

GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village, l. 139.

But in his duty prompt at every call,
He watch'd and wept, he pray'd and felt, for all.

GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village, l. 165.

At church, with meek and unaffected grace,
His looks adorn'd the venerable place;
Truth from his lips prevail'd with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remain'd to pray.

GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village, l. 177.

E'en children follow'd with endearing wile,
And pluck'd his gown, to share the good man's smile. . . .

To them his heart, his love, his griefs were given,
But all his serious thoughts had rest in Heaven.
As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form, Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,

Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,

Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

GOLDSMITH, The Deserted Village, l. 183.

⁹ As pleasant songs, at morning sung,
The words that dropped from his sweet tongue

Strengthened our hearts; or, heard at night,
Made all our lumbers soft and light.

LONGFELLOW, The Golden Legend. Pt. I.

Skilful alike with tongue and pen,
He preached to all men everywhere
The Gospel of the Golden Rule,
The New Commandment given to men,
Thinking the deed, and not the creed,
Would help us in our utmost need.

LONGFELLOW, Tales of a Wayside Inn: Prelude,
l. 217.

1 He of their wicked ways
Shall them admonish, and before them set
The paths of righteousness.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. xi, l. 808.

2 It comes now into my mind to observe that I am sensible that I have been a little too free to make mirth with the minister of our ship, he being a very sober and upright man.

A minister, but still a man.

POPE, Epistle to James Craggs.

3 And truths divine came mended from that tongue.

POPE, Eloisa to Abelard, l. 66.

4 He was a shrewd and sound divine,
Of loud Dissent the mortal terror;
And when, by dint of page and line,
He 'stablished Truth, or started Error,
The Baptist found him far too deep,
The Deist sighed with saving sorrow,
And the lean Levite went to sleep,
And dreamed of eating pork to-morrow.

WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED, The Vicar.

His sermon never said or showed
That Earth is foul, that Heaven is gracious,
Without refreshment on the road
From Jerome, or from Athanasius;
And sure a righteous zeal inspired,
The hand and head that penned and ploughed
them,

For all who understood, admired—
And some who did not understand them.

WINTHROP MACKWORTH PRAED, The Vicar.

V—Preachers: Priests

⁵ Once have a priest for an enemy, good-bye
To peace.

SARAH FLOWER ADAMS, Vivia Perpetua. Act III, sc. 2.

⁶ The Jackdaw sat on the Cardinal's chair!
Bishop and abbot and prior were there;

Many a monk, and many a friar,

Many a knight, and many a squire,

With a great many more of lesser degree,—
In sooth a goodly company;

And they served the Lord Primate on bended knee.

Never, I ween, Was a prouder seen,
Read of in books, or dreamt of in dreams,
Than the Cardinal Lord Archbishop of Rheims!

R. H. BARHAM, The Jackdaw of Rheims.

⁷ In brief, I don't stick To declare Father Dick—

So they call'd him, "for short"—was a "Regular Brick,"

A metaphor taken—I have not the page aright—

Out of an ethical work by the Stagyrte.

R. H. BARHAM, The Brothers of Birchington.
The reference is to Aristotle, Nicomachean Ethics, sec. i, where he defines a happy man as a faultless cube.

Och! Father O'Flynn, you've the wonderful way wid you,

All ould sinners are wishful to pray wid you,
All the young childer are wild far to play wid you,

You've such a way wid you, Father avick!

Still, for all you've so gentle a soul,

Gad, you've your flock in the grandest control,

Checking the crazy ones,

Coaxin' ounals ones,

Liffin' the lazy ones on wid the stick.

ALFRED PERCEVAL GRAVES, Father O'Flynn.

Once the Bishop looked grave at your jest,

Till this remark sent him off with the rest:

"Is it lave gaily

All to the laity?

Cannot the clergy be Irishmen too?"

ALFRED PERCEVAL GRAVES, Father O'Flynn.

15 A priest, ye cry, a priest!—lame shepherds they,

How shall they gather in the straggling flock?
Dumb dogs that bark not—how shall they compel

The loitering vagrants to the Master's fold?
Fitter to bask before the blazing fire,
And snuff the mess neat-handed Phillis dresses,

Than on the snow-wreath battle with the wolf.

VI—Preaching

16 I preached as never sure to preach again,
And as a dying man to dying men.

RICHARD BAXTER, Love Breathing Thanks and Praise.

Let us, even to the wearing of our tongues to the stumps, preach and pray.

JOHN BRADFORD, Sermon on Repentance.

I shook the sermon out of my mind.

JOHN BUNYAN, Grace Abounding.

17 Well stored with pious frauds, and like most discourses of the sort, much better calculated for the private advantage of the preacher than the edification of the hearers.

lines, that St. Thomas Aquinas called eternity
"Nunc stans," a standing Now. His paraphrase in Hugh Boyd's translation from Petrarch, made about 1820, and given below, should be noted.

The time will come when every change shall cease,
This quick revolving wheel shall rest In peace;
No summer then shall glow, nor winter freeze;
Nothing shall be to come, and nothing past,
But an eternal now shall ever last.

PETRARCH, The Triumph of Eternity, l. 119.

One of our poets—which is it?—speaks of an everlasting now. If such a condition of existence were offered to us in this world, and it were put to whose votes would be given in the affirmative?

Burke said there were Three Estates in Parliament; but, in the Reporters' Gallery yonder, there sat a Fourth Estate more important far than they all.

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero-Worship: The Hero as Man of Letters. 1839. The statement is not found in Burke's published works, and it is probable that Carlyle inadvertently attributed the phrase to Burke instead of to Macaulay.

 Buy not what you want, but what you need; what you do not need is dear at a farthing. (Eras non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est; quod non opus est, asse carum est.)
 CATO, Reliquæ. (JORDAN, p. 79.) Quoted by Seneca, Epistula ad Luciliū. Epia. xiv, sec. 27.
 Never, from a mistaken economy, buy a thing you do not want because it is cheap; or, from a silly pride, because it is dear.
 LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 10 Jan., 1749.
 Never buy what you do not want because it is cheap; it will be dear to you.

 What costs little is valued less.
 CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. I, ch. 34.
 What we obtain too cheaply we esteem too lightly; it is dearness only which gives everything its value.

THOMAS PAINE, The Crisis: Introduction.

¹ You cannot make a cheap palace.

EMERSON, Journals, 1857.

Magnificence cannot be cheap, for what is cheap cannot be magnificent.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Works. Vol. v, p. 458.

² Earth gets its price for what Earth gives us;

The beggar is taxed for a corner to die in,
The priest bath his fee who comes and shrives us.

We bargain for the graves we lie in;
At the devil's booth are all things sold,
Each ounce of dross costs its ounce of gold.

³ Things of greatest profit are set forth with least price.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues.

⁴ The things are most dear to us which have cost us most. (Les choses nous sont plus chères, qui nous ont plus coûté.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. II, ch. 8.

⁵ No mortal thing can bear so high a price,
But that with mortal thing it may be bought.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH, Love the Only Price of Love.

⁶ The highest price a man can pay for a thing is to ask for it.

W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 846.

⁷ There is hardly anything in the world that some man cannot make a little worse and sell a little cheaper, and the people who consider price only are this man's lawful prey.

Attributed to JOHN RUSKIN, but not found in his works.

All works of taste must bear a price in proportion to the skill, taste, time, and expense and risk attending their invention and manufacture. Those things called dear are, when justly estimated, the cheapest: they are attended with much less profit to the artist than those which everybody calls cheap. Beautiful forms and compositions are not made by chance, nor can they ever, in any material, be made at small expense. A competition for cheapness and not excellence of workmanship is the most frequent and certain cause of the rapid decay and entire destruction of arts and manufactures.

JOSIAN WEDGWOOD, Dearness and Cheapness.

Not how cheap, but how good.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

⁸ Her price is fall'n.

II—Price: "All Men Have Their Price"

⁹ 'Tis pleasant purchasing our fellow creatures;

And all are to be sold, if you consider
Their passions, and are dextrous; some by features

Are brought up, others by a warlike leader,
Some by a place—as tend their years or natures;

But most by ready cash—but all have prices,
From crowns to kicks, according to their vices.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto v, st. 27.

¹⁰ Still as of old men by themselves are priced—
For thirty pieces Judas sold himself, not Christ.

HESTER H. CHOLMONDELEY. Quoted by her sister, Mary Cholmondeley, as heading to Chapter 11, Diana Tempest. Quoted by Robert Hugh Benson at end of chapter, Herod, in Christ in the Church.

¹¹ All those men have their price.

SIR ROBERT WALPOLE. (WILLIAM COXE, Memoirs of Sir Robert Walpole. Vol. iv, p. 369.)

The context is as follows: "Flowery oratory he [Walpole] despised. He ascribed to the interested views of themselves or their relatives the declarations of pretended patriots, of whom he said, 'All those men have their price.'"

Every man has his price.

Attributed to SIR ROBERT WALPOLE, but probably a misquotation. A. F. Robbins, in the Gentleman's Magazine (No. iv, p. 589), asserts that Walpole used this phrase in a speech either in November or December, 1734. Horace Walpole denies this, and claims that it was falsely attributed to Sir Robert by his enemies. (Letter, 26 Aug., 1785.)

I know the price of every man in this house except three.

Attributed to SIR ROBERT WALPOLE. (Notes and Queries, 11 May, 1907, p. 367.) Latham's Famous Sayings and Their Authors asserts that Walpole made this remark to Lord John Leveson-Gower, and that it was from this that the misquotation, "Every man has his price" arose.

¹² It is an old maxim that every man has his price.

SIR WILLIAM WYNDHAM. (The Bee, vol. viii, p. 97. 1733.)

Every man is to be had one way or another, and every woman almost any way.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 5 June, 1750.

Every man has his price, and every woman her figure.

RICHARD LOVELACE, To Althea from Prison. (1642)

That which the world miscalls a jail,

A private closet is to me. . . .

Locks, bars, and solitude together met,
 Make me no prisoner, but an anchorite.

LORD ARTHUR CAPEL, Written in Confinement. (1649) Also attributed to Sir Roger

L'Estrange. (Notes and Queries, 10 April, 1909, p. 288.)

Double grills with great nails, triple doors, heavy bolts, to wicked souls you represent hell;
 but to the innocent you are only wood, stones, iron.

(Doubles grilles à gros cloux,

Triples portes, forts verroux,

Aux âmes vraiment méchantes

Mais aux âmes innocentes

Vous n'êtes que de bois, des pierres, du fer.)

PELLISSON-FONTANIER, Written on the Wall of His Cell in the Bastille.

¹¹ Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
 Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
 Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar. Act i, sc. 7, l. 93.

Might I but through my prison once a day

Behold this maid: all corners else o' the earth

Let liberty make use of; space enough

Have I in such a prison.

SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest. Act i, sc. 2, l. 490.

¹²

Come, let's away to prison:

We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act v, sc. 3, l. 8.

We'll wear out

TACITUS, History. Bk. iv, sec. 64.

¹ I know not whether Laws be right,
Or whether Laws be wrong;
All that we know who lie in gaol
Is that the wall is strong;
And that each day is like a year,
A year whose days are long.

OSCAR WILDE, The Ballad of Reading Gaol.
Pt. v, st. 1.

This too I know—and wise it were
If each could know the same—
That every prison that men build
Is built with bricks of shame,
And bound with bars, lest Christ should see
How men their brothers maim.

OSCAR WILDE, The Ballad of Reading Gaol.
Pt. v, st. 3.

The vilest deeds like poison weeds
Bloom well in prison-air:

It is only what is good in Man
That wastes and withers there:
Pale Anguish keeps the heavy gate
And the Warder is Despair.

OSCAR WILDE, The Ballad of Reading Gaol.
Pt. v, st. 5.

But though lean Hunger and green Thirst
Like asp with adder fight,

We have little care of prison fare,
For what chills and kills outright
Is that every stone one lifts by day
Becomes one's heart by night.

⁴ It is an undoubted truth, that the less one has to do, the less time one finds to do it in. One yawns, one procrastinates, one can do it when one will, and therefore one seldom does it at all.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 30 Sept., 1757.

⁵ No idleness, no laziness, no procrastination; never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 26 Dec., 1749.

Chesterfield adds that this was the rule of
"the famous and unfortunate Pensionary De Witt." The axiom is repeated in the letter of 5 Feb., 1750.

Never leave that till to-morrow which you can do to-day.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard.

There is a maxim, "Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day." It is a maxim for sluggards. A better reading of it is, "Never do to-day what you can as well do to-morrow," because something may occur to make you regret your premature action.

1
That in our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat: descent and fall
To us is adverse.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ii, l. 75.

2
I forge ahead, nor can the opposing rush,
That sways all else, my onward progress check.

But bears me on against a whirling world.
(Nitor in adversum, rec me, qui cetera, vincit Impetus, et rapido contrarius evchor orbi.)
OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. ii, l. 72. (KING, tr.)

3
Every step of progress the world has made has been from scaffold to scaffold and from stake to stake

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech for Woman's Rights, 15 Oct., 1851.

Life means progress, and progress means suffering

H. W. VAN LOON, Tolerance, p. 89.

4
For my own part I am persuaded that everything advances by an unchangeable law through the eternal constitution and association of latent causes, which have been long before predestinated.

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFINUS, *De Rebus Gestis
Alexandri Magni*. Bk. v, ch. 11, sec. 10.

5
There is a period of life when we go back as we advance (Il est un terme de la vie au-delà duquel en rétrograde en avançant.)

ROUSSIAU, Emile. Ch. 2.

6
The greater part of progress is the desire to progress. (Magna pars est profectus velle proficere.)

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucilium. Epis. lxxi, 36.

7
Progress, therefore, is not an accident, but a necessity. . . . It is a part of nature.

HERBERT SPENCER, Social Statics. Pt. i, ch. 2.

8
Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new:

That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do.

TENNISON, Locksley Hall, l. 117.

9
Onward the chariot of the Untarrying moves;
Nor day divulges him nor night conceals;
Thou hear'st the echo of unreturning hooves
And thunder of irrevocable wheels.

WILLIAM WATSON, Epigrams. No. xvii.

10
And step by step, since time began,
I see the steady gain of man.

WHITTIER, The Chapel of the Hermits.

I have seen that Man moves over with each new generation into a bigger body, more awful, more reverent and more free than he has had before.

OVID, Amores. Bk. ii, eleg. 19, l. 3.

We are always striving for things forbidden, and desiring those denied us. (Nilitur in vetitum semper cupimusque negata.)

OVID, Amores. Bk. iii, eleg. iv, l. 17.

Whatever is guarded we desire the more; the very care invites the thief, few love what they may have. (Quidquid servatur cupimus magis, ipsaque furem Cura vocat; pauci, quod sinit alter, amant.)

OVID, Amores. Bk. iii, eleg. 4, l. 25.

So great is man's hunger for forbidden food!
(Fames homini vetitorum tanta ciborum est.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. xv, l. 138.

Only forbidden pleasures are loved immoderately;
when lawful, they do not excite desire. (Diliguntur immodice sola quæ non licent; . . . non nutrit ardorem concupiscendi, ubi frui licet.)

Stolen glances, sweeter for the theft.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i, st. 74. (1818)

Stolen sweets are always sweeter:

Stolen kisses much completer;

Stolen looks are nice in chapels:

Stolen, stolen be your apples.

THOMAS RANDOLPH, Song of Fairies.

The pleasure of all things, amongst the ignorant, increases with the very danger which should repel. (Omnium enim rerum voluptas, apud imperitos, ipso quo fugare debet periculo, crescit.)

SENECA, De Beneficiis. Bk. vii, sec. 9.

He found out a new thing—namely, that to promise not to do a thing is the surest way in the world to make a body want to go and do that very thing.

MARK TWAIN, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer. Ch. 22.

II—Prohibition: The Eighteenth Amendment

See Social-life and Glee sit down
All joyous and unthinking,

Till, quite transmugrified, they're grown Debauchery and Drinking.

ROBERT BURNS, An Address to the Unco Guid.

In all matters having to do with the personal habits and customs of large numbers of our people, we must be certain that the established processes of legal change are followed.

WOODROW WILSON, Veto Message, on the Volstead Act, 27 Oct., 1919.

It is here at last—dry America's first birthday. At one minute past twelve to-morrow morning a new nation will be born. . . . Tonight John Barleycorn makes his last will and testament. Now for an era of clear thinking and clean living.

UNKNOWN, Anti-Saloon League Manifesto, 15 Jan., 1920.

Good-bye, John. You were God's worst enemy. You were Hell's best friend. I hate you with a perfect hatred.

BILLY SUNDAY, Funeral Oration, over John Barleycorn, Norfolk, Va., 16 Jan., 1920.

But the cheerful Spring came kindly on,
And show'rs began to fall:

John Barleycorn got up again,
And sore surpris'd them all.

ROBERT BURNS, John Barleycorn. St. 3.

Of old, all invitations ended
With the well-known R.S.V.P.,

But now our laws have been amended
The hostess writes B.Y.O.B.

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, Thoughts on Being Invited to Dinner. "B.Y.O.B.," it should perhaps be explained, means "Bring your own booze."

There are conditions relating to its [prohibition's] enforcement which savor of a nationwide scandal. It is the most demoralizing factor in our public life.

WARREN G. HARDING, Message to Congress, 8 Dec., 1922.

Vice, crime, immorality, disease, insanity, corruption, and a general disregard for law, directly traceable to the unenforceability of the Volstead Act, are increasing with alarming rapidity.

CONGRESSMAN GEORGE J. SCHNEIDER, of Wisconsin. (Congressional Record, 69th Congress, 1st session, p. 629.)

Industry, commerce, art, literature, music, learning, entertainment, and benevolence all find their finest expression in this saloonless land.

Anti-Saloon League Statement, N. Y. Times, 26 Nov., 1923.

One out of the twelve disciples went wrong.

JOHN W. HARRIS, Senator from Oklahoma, minimizing the fact that 875 agents of the government's prohibition enforcement service, one-twelfth of the entire force, had been dismissed for corruption. (Congressional Record, 69th Congress, 1st session, p. 80.)

Our country has deliberately undertaken a great social and economic experiment, noble in motive and far-reaching in purpose.

HERBERT HOOVER, Letter to Senator William E. Borah, 28 Feb., 1928. Repeated by Hoover in address at Stanford University accepting the Republican nomination for President.

¹ The Commission, by a large majority, does not favor the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. I am in accord with this view.

HERBERT HOOVER, Letter of Transmittal, accompanying Wickersham Report, Jan., 1931.

² We expect legislation to conform to public opinion, not public opinion to yield to legislation.

Report of Wickersham Commission, 20 Jan., 1931.

The whole subject is one of great difficulty.

GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM, Interview, after submission of his report on prohibition.

Prohibition has made nothing but trouble.

ALPHONSE CAPONE, Newspaper interview.

³ All I kin git out o' the Wickersham position on prohibition is that the distinguished jurist seems to feel that if we'd let 'em have it the problem o' keepin' 'em from gittin' it would be greatly simplified.

KEN HUBBARD, Abe Martin's Broadcast, p. 125.

⁴ The prohibition law, written for weaklings and derelicts, has divided the nation, like Gaul, into three parts—wets, dries, and hypocrites.

MRS. CHARLES H. SABIN, Address, 9 Feb., 1931.

⁵ You cannot write on the banner of the Democratic party the skull and crossbones of an outlaw trade.

JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, U. S. Senator from Arkansas, replying to Raskob's state control of liquor plan, before the Democratic National Committee, 5 March, 1931.

⁶ In the meantime alcohol produces a delightful social atmosphere that nothing else can produce.

ARNOLD BENNETT, Things That Have Interested Me: For and Against Prohibition.

⁷ A young prohibition worker had his office in the Burr Block [Lincoln, Neb., 1890] with Bryan and Charley Dawes. He had been baptized William Eugene, but he came to be known to fame as "Pussyfoot" Johnson.

FAXTON HIBBEN, The Peerless Leader, p. 125.

⁸ The law of Maine will hardly take effect while the law of fermentation stands unrepealed on the pages of heaven's statute book. The strictest Sabbath edict never could keep the Puritan ale from working on Sunday.

O. W. HOLMES, Address, before the New England Society in New York, December, 1865, referring to the passage of the Maine prohibition law.

A law made to be habitually and openly violated is a frightful demoralizer of society. A law notoriously despised by many that appear as its public advocates, which takes many a vote from the same band that an hour later is lifted trembling to the voter's lips with the draught that quiets at once his nerves and his conscience.

O. W. HOLMES, Address, before the New England Society in New York, December, 1885, referring to the Maine prohibition law.

⁹ It is mighty difficult to get drunk on 2.75 per cent beer.

HERBERT HOOVER, Statement to the Press, while Food Administrator, 5 June, 1918.

¹⁰ As for prohibition, it is going to be recorded as one of the results of the European War, foreseen by nobody.

STEPHEN LEACOCK, The Woman Question.

¹¹ Whether or not the world would be vastly benefited by a total banishment from it of all intoxicating drinks seems not now an open question. Three-fourths of mankind confess the affirmative with their tongues, and I believe all the rest acknowledge it in their hearts.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Address, before the Washington Society of Springfield, Ill., 22 Feb., 1842.

Prohibition will work great injury to the cause of temperance. It is a species of intemperance within itself, for it goes beyond the bounds of reason, in that it attempts to control a man's appetite by legislation and makes a crime out of things that are not crimes.

Statement attributed to ABRAHAM LINCOLN, in handbill circulated in 1887, during a campaign to close saloons. In Wet Slanders of Abraham Lincoln, by Albert Porter, the author says that a copy of this handbill was sent to Lincoln's biographers, Nicolay and Hay, and they declared that they were unable to discover the statement in any of his papers or speeches. Every Evening, 12 Feb., 1926, states that there are affidavits extant to the effect that Col. John B. Goodwin, of Atlanta, Ga., admitted he had fabricated the statement.

¹⁴ We drained the flask we dared not keep And laughed and talked ourselves to sleep.

J. C. SQUIRE, Approaching New York.

¹⁵ In the whole course of history, there's been no government that could alter the laws of nature. When by mere legislation man can stop fruit from fermenting of its own accord after it falls to the ground, he can talk about a law of prohibition. The very word destroys its meaning. You can't prohibit nature.

E. TEMPLE THURSTON, Mr. Bottlesby Does Something.

It was the Eighteenth Amendment that for the first time in our history challenged the integrity of the compact between the States and struck at the heart of our Federal system—the principles of local self-government.

Temperance is moderation in the things that are good and total abstinence from the things that are bad.

PROMISE

I—Promise: Apothegms

Promise is most given when the least is said.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Hero and Leander, l. 234.

Promise is debt.

CHAUCEY, Man of Law's Tale: Prologue.

There was never promise made, but it was broken or kept.

QUEEN ELIZABETH, (JOHN DEE, Diary, p. 37.)

A man apt to promise is apt to forget.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia, No. 271.

He promises like a merchantman and pays like a man-of-war.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia, No. 2007.

You never bade me hope, 'tis true;

I asked you not to swear:

But I looked in those eyes of blue,

And read a promise there.

GERALD GRIFFIN, You Never Bade Me Hope.

Promise is a promise, dough you make it in de dark er de moon.

JORI CHANDLER HARRIS, Nights with Uncle Remus, Ch. 39.

Some persons make promises for the pleasure of breaking them.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Characteristics, p. 145.

Many promises impair confidence. (Multa fides promissa levat.)

Fair promises avail but little,

Like too rich pie-crust, they're so brittle.

EDWARD WARD, Hudibras Redivivus. Pt. v, canto vii, l. 9.

II—Promise and Performance

If we've promised them aught, let us keep our promise!

ROBERT BROWNING, The Pied Piper. Pt. xv.

Great promise, small performance.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Epigrams. Cent. v, No. 10.

Those who are quick to promise are generally slow to perform.

C. H. SEURONEN, Ploughman's Pictures, 18.

Half the promises people say were never kept were never made.

TATE AND BRADY, Psalms XV.

4 His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 41.

Promising is the very air o' the time; it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use.

SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens. Act v, sc. 1, l. 24.
He will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brab-bler the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, v, 1, 97.

5 And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense:
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.

³ Thy voice sounds like a prophet's word;
And in its hollow tones are heard
The thanks of millions yet to be.

FITZ-GREENE HALLICK, Marco Bosseris.

⁴ Whatever I state either will come to pass or will not; truly the great Apollo has given me the art of divination. (Quidquid dicam, aut erit aut non: Divinare etenim magnus mihi donat Apollo.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. ii, sat. 5, l. 59.

⁵ Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions.

Old Testament: Joel, ii, 28.

Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams.

New Testament: Acts, ii, 17.

⁶ I will eat exceedingly, and prophesy.

BEN JONSON, Bartholomew Fair. Act i.

⁷ Can ye not discern the signs of the times?

New Testament: Matthew, xvi, 3.

⁸ O, my prophetic soul! My uncle!

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act i, sc. 5, l. 40.

⁹ There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased;
The which observed, a man may prophesy.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 80.

Over thy wounds now do I prophesy.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Cæsar. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 259.

¹⁰ If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow and which will not,

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act i, sc. 3, l. 58.

¹¹ I prophesied that, though I never told anybody.

HORACE AND JAMES SMITH, Rejected Addresses.
No. 5, Hampshire Farmer's Address.

¹² I am about to die, and that is the hour in which men are gifted with prophetic power.
SOCRATES. (PLATO, Apology. Sec. 30.)

'Tis the sunset of life gives me mystical lore.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, Lockie's Warning, l. 35.
Some long experienced souls in the world, before their dislodging, arrive to the height of prophetic spirits.

ERASMUS, The Praise of Folly.

Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain.

I shall always consider the best guesser the best prophet. (Bene qui conficiet, vitem hunc per-hibebo optimum.)

CICERO, De Divinatione. Bk. ii, sec. 5.

The best qualification of a prophet is to have a good memory.

LORD HALIFAX, Works, p. 249.

¹⁹ Prophet of evil! never hadst thou yet
A cheerful word for me. To mark the signs
Of coming mischief is thy great delight,
Good dost thou ne'er foretell nor bring to pass.

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. i, l. 138. (Bryant, tr.)

And better skill'd in dark events to come.
HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. v, l. 219. (Pope, tr.)

²⁰ God has granted to every people a prophet in its own tongue.

The Koran. (EMERSON, Representative Men: Napoleon.)

God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake the man.

JOHN LOCKE. (EMERSON, Representative Men: Swedenborg.)

1
Thine was the prophet's vision, thine
The exultation, the divine
Insanity of noble minds,
That never falters nor abates,
But labors and endures and waits,
Till all that it foresees it finds,
Or what it cannot find creates!
LONGFELLOW, Kéramos.

J. R. LOWELL, The Biglow Papers. Ser. i, No. 9,
l. 97.

3
Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.
New Testament: Matthew, vii, 15.

Take heed of a prophetess.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

4
A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house.
New Testament: Matthew, xiii, 57; Mark, vi,
4; Luke, iv, 24; John, iv, 44.

No man has been a prophet, not only in his own house, but in his own country, saith the experience of histories.
MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. iii, ch. 2.

5
What should I be but a prophet and a liar, Whose mother was a leprechaun, whose father was a friar?

Teethed on a crucifix and cradled under water,
What should I be but the fiend's goddaughter?

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY, *The Singing-
Woman from the Wood's Edge*.

Your fathers, where are they? And the prophets, do they live forever?
Old Testament: Zechariah, i, 5.

PROSPERITY

I—Prosperity: Its Dangers

21 Prosperity is a feeble reed. (C'est un faible roseau que la prospérité.)
DANIEL D'ANCHETRA, Tyr et Sidon.

22
In prosperity, when the stream of life flows according to our wishes, let us diligently avoid all arrogance, haughtiness and pride. (In re-bus prosperis et ad voluntatem nostram flu-entibus superbiam magnopere, fastidium arrogantiamque fugimus.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. I, ch. 26, sec. 90.

In prosperity one should resolve nothing arrogantly or vindictively against anyone. (In secundis rebus nihil in quemquam superbe ac violentius consulere debeat.)

LIVY, History. Bk. xlv, sec. 8.

1 And you shall find the greatest enemy
A man can have is his prosperity.

SAMUEL DANIEL, Philotas: Dedication, l. 13.

2 Everything in the world may be endured, except only a succession of prosperous days.
(Alles in der Welt lässt sich ertragen, Nur nicht eine Reihe von schönen Tagen.)

GÖTTE, Sprüche in Reimen, iii.

3 Prosperity lets go the bridle.

H. G. BORN, Hand-Book of Proverbs, p. 476.

Prosperity destroys fools, and endangers the wise.

H. G. BORN, Hand-Book of Proverbs, p. 476.

4 As you bear your prosperity, Celsus, so shall we bear with you. (Ut tu fortunam, sic nos te, Celse, feremus.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 8, l. 17.

5 The prosperous man is never sure that he is loved for himself. (Felix se nescit amari.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. vii, l. 727.

Prosperity makes few friends. (La prospérité fait peu d'amis.)

VAUVENARQUE, Réflexions. No. 17.

6 Pride waxes in prosperity, nor is it easy to bear good fortune with equal mind. (Luxuriant animi rebus plerumque secundis, Nec facile est æqua commoda mente pati.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. ii, l. 437.

Prosperity can change man's nature; and seldom is any one cautious enough to resist the effects of good fortune. (Res secundæ valent commutare naturam, et raro quisquam erga bona sua satis cautus est.)

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFUS, *De Rebus Gestis
Alexandri Magni*. Bk. x, ch. 1, sec. 40.

7 How much does great prosperity overspread the mind with darkness. (Quantum caliginis mentibus nostris obicit magna felicitas!)

SENeca, De Brevitate Vitæ. Sec. 13.

When God has once begun to oppress the prosperous, he bears down hard. To such an end do mighty fortunes come. (Semel profecto premere felices deus Cum capit, urget. Hos habent magna exitus.)

SENeca, Hercules Olfæus, l. 713.

8 Seeing upon how slippery a place
Fortune for mortals and misfortune stand,
The man who lives at ease should ever look
For rocks ahead, and when he prospers most

Watch lest he suffer shipwreck unawares.
SOPHOCLES, Philoctetes, l. 302.

9 We are corrupted by prosperity. (Felicitate corrumpimur.)

TACITUS, History. Bk. I, sec. 13.

10 Let me see no other conflict but with prosperity. If my path run on before me level and smooth, it is all a mirage; in reality it is steep and arduous as a chamois pass.

H. D. THOREAU, Journal, 25 June, 1840.

11 Prosperity doth bewitch men, seeming clear;
As seas do laugh, show white, when rocks are near.

JOHN WEBSTER, The White Devil. Act v, sc. 6.

II—Prosperity and Adversity

12 If Fortune favors, no need for toil.

If Fortune aids not, so much the less toil.

(Si fortuna juvat, nihil laboris:

Si non adjuvat, hoc minus laboris.)

AUSONIUS [?], Septem Sapientum Sententia:
No. 4, Periander.

If Fortune favors, do not rejoice;

If Fortune thunders, do not despond.

(Si fortuna juvat, caveto tolli:

Si fortuna tonat, caveto mergi.)

AUSONIUS [?], Septem Sapientum Sententia.
Another rendering.

13 Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New,
which carrieth the greater benediction.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Adversity.

Prosperity is not without many fears and dis-tastes; and adversity is not without comforts and hopes.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Adversity.

14 He who swells in prosperity, will shrink in adversity.

H. G. BORN, Hand-Book of Proverbs, 401.

It is a sign of weakness not to bear prosperity as well as adversity with moderation. (Ut adversus res, sic secundas immoderate ferre levitatis est.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. I, ch. 26, sec. 90.

15 Reverse cannot befall that fine Prosperity
Whose sources are interior.

As soon Adversity

A diamond overtake.

EMILY DICKINSON, Poems. Pt. v, No. 8.

16 In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, vii, 14.

In prosperity, caution; in adversity, patience.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

Take your part as it cometh, of rough and sleek of smooth.

UNKNOWN, Beryn, 37. (c. 1400)

¹ Adversity is easier borne than prosperity forgot.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 763.

² Prosperity is a great teacher; adversity is a greater.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Sketches and Essays: On the Conversation of Lords.

³ Hopeful in adversity, fearful in prosperity, is the heart that is prepared for weal or woe. (Sperat infestis, metuit secundis, Alteram sortem bene preparatum Pectus.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. ii, ode 10, l. 13.

If hindrances obstruct thy way,
Thy magnanimity display.
And let thy strength be seen:
But O, if Fortune fill thy sail
With more than a propitious gale,
Take half thy canvas in.

HORACE, Odes, ii, 10. (Cowper, tr.)

⁴ Adversity is wont to reveal genius, prosperity to hide it. (Ingenium res adversæ nudare solent, celare secundæ.)

¹⁰ We become wiser in the midst of adversity; it is prosperity that takes away righteousness. (Melius in malis sapimus; secunda rectum auferunt.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epia. 94, sec. 74.

Affliction teacheth a wicked person some time to pray: Prosperity never.

BEN JONSON, Explorata: Afflicto Pia Magistra.

¹¹ The good things which belong to prosperity are to be wished; but the good things that belong to adversity are to be admired. (Bona rerum secundarum, optabilia; adversarum, mirabilia.)

SENECA. (BACON, Essays: Of Adversity.)

Happy is he who knows how to bear the estate of either slave or king, and who can match his countenance with either lot. For he who bears his ill with even soul has robbed misfortune of its power.

(Felix quisque novit famulum
Regemque pati vultusque suos Variare potest. Rapuit vires pondusque malis casus animo
Qui tulit sequo.)

SENECA, Hercules Cæcis, l. 228.

¹² Welcome the sour cup of prosperity! Affliction may one day smile again; and until then, sit thee down, sorrow!

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act i, sc. 1, l. 316.

¹³ All men, when prosperity is at its height, ought then chiefly to consider in what way they will endure disaster. (Omnis, quom secundæ res sunt maxumæ, tum maxime Meditari secum oportet quo pacto adversam ærum nam ferant.)

TERENCE, Phormio, l. 241. (Act ii, sc. 1.)

¹⁴ To me, Cyrus, it appears more difficult to find a man that bears prosperity well, than one that bears adversity well; for prosperity creates presumption in most men, but adversity brings sobriety to all.

XENOPHON, Cyropædia. Bk. viii, ch. 4, sec. 14. Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man; but for one man who can stand prosperity, there are a hundred that will stand adversity.

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero-Worship: The Hero as Man of Letters.

PROVERBS AND FAMILIAR SAYINGS

I—Proverbs: Definitions

8
Certainly apothegms are of excellent use. They are "mucrones verborum," pointed speeches. Cicero prettily called them "salinas," salt pits, that you may extract salt out of and sprinkle it where you will. They serve to be interlaced in continued speech. They serve to be recited upon occasion of themselves. They serve, if you take out the kernel of them and make them your own.

FRANCIS BACON, Apothegms: Introduction.

This delivering of knowledge in distinct and disjointed aphorisms doth leave the wit of man more free to turn and toss, and to make use of that which is so delivered to more several purposes and applications.

FRANCIS BACON, Maxims of the Law: Preface.

There is some degree of licentiousness and error in forming axioms.

FRANCIS BACON, Novum Organum: Summary of the Second Part. Aphorism 17.

9
The genius, wit, and spirit of a nation are discovered in its proverbs.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays:

The proverbs of a nation furnish the index to its spirit, and the results of its civilization.

J. G. HOLLAND, Gold-Foil: An Exordial Essay.

Maxims are the condensed good sense of nations.

SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH. (Quoted on the title page of Broom's Legal Maxims.)

10
There is a certain list of vices committed in all ages, and declaimed against by all authors, which will last as long as human nature; or digested into commonplaces may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until Doomsday.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Pseudodoxia Epidemica.

11
I do not say a proverb is amiss when aptly and seasonably applied; but to be forever discharging them, right or wrong, hit or miss, renders conversation insipid and vulgar.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. II, ch. 43.

This formal fool, your man, speaks naught but proverbs,

And speak men what they can to him he'll answer

With some rhyme, rotten sentence, or old saying,
Such spokes as ye ancient of ye parish use.

HENRY PORTER, Two Angry Women of Abington. Sc. 3. (1599)

Sigh'd forth proverbs,
That hunger broke stone walls, that dogs must eat,
That meat was made for mouths, that the gods sent not Corn for the rich man only.

SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus. Act I, sc. 1, l. 209.

12
There is no proverb which is not true. (No hay refran que no sea verdadero.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote.

13
A proverb is a short sentence based on long experience.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote.

Proverbs are the daughters of daily experience. (Spreekwoorden zijn dochters der dagelijkse ondervinding.)

UNKNOWN. A Dutch proverb.

14
Most maxim-mongers have preferred the prettiness to the justness of a thought, and the turn to the truth.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 15 Jan., 1753.

Proverbs are art—cheap art. As a general rule they are not true; unless indeed they happen to be mere platitudes.

JOSEPH CONRAD, Gastrop Ruis. Ch. 6.

In all pointed sentences, some degree of accuracy must be sacrificed to conciseness.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Works. Vol. x, p. 306.

¹ Proverbial expressions and trite sayings are the flowers of the rhetoric of a vulgar man. . . . A man of fashion never has recourse to proverbs and vulgar aphorisms.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 27 Sept., 1749.

Never utter the truism, but live it among men.

EMERSON, Journals, Vol. iii, p. 455.

To repeat what has been said a thousand times is commonplace.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Works, Vol. i, p. 381.

² Mean narrow maxims which enslave mankind,
Ne'er from its bias warp thy settled mind.

CHURCHILL, The Prophecy of Famine, l. 163.

The mind of man, when its daily maxims are put before it, revolts from anything so stupid, so mean, so poor.

WALTER BAGEHOT, Literary Studies, Vol. ii, p. 256.

³ A man of maxims only is like a Cyclops with one eye, and that eye placed in the back of his head.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Table Talk, 24 June, 1827.

⁴ Proverbs are easily made in cold blood.

DICKENS, Barnaby Rudge, Ch. 14.

⁵ Thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword, among all nations.

Old Testament: Deuteronomy, xxviii, 37.

Constant popping off of proverbs will make thee a byword thyself.

THOMAS FULLER, Intro. ad Prudentiam, i, 196.

⁶ Syllogisms do breed or rather are all the variety of man's life. They are the steps by which we walk in all our businesses.

SIR KENELM DIGBY, Man's Soul, p. 29.

⁷ The wise make proverbs and fools repeat them.

ISAAC D'ISRAËLI, Curiosities of Literature, Ser. ii, vol. i, p. 449.

⁸ Despise not the discourse of the wise, but acquaint thyself with their proverbs; for of them thou shalt learn instruction.

Apocrypha: Ecclesiasticus, viii, 8.

⁹ He gave good heed, and sought out, and set in order many proverbs.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, xii, 9.

These proverbs, which contained the wisdom of many ages and nations, I assembled and formed into a connected discourse prefixed to the Almanack of 1757, as the bargain of a wise old man to the people attending an auction.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Autobiography, Ch. 1.

Franklin's memory seems to have been wrong in this, for his reference is undoubtedly to the preface to Poor Richard for 1758.

¹⁰ Proverbs, like the sacred books of each nation, are the sanctuary of the intuitions.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Compensation.

¹¹ A proverb is much matter decocted into few words.

THOMAS FULLER, Worthies of England, Ch. 2.

Well short in words and well long in wit.

FRÈRE LORENZ, Le Somme des Vices et des Vertus, (1279) Referring to the Lord's Prayer.

¹² Don't you go believing in sayings, Picotee; they are all made by men, for their own advantage.

THOMAS HARDY, Hand of Ethelberta, Ch. 20.

¹³ Stories and sayings they will well remember.

GEORGE HERBERT, Priest to the Temple, Ch. 7.

¹⁴ There are words and maxims whereby you may soothe the pain and cast much of the malady aside. (Sunt verba et voces, quibus hunc lenire dolorem Possis et magnam morbi deponere partem.)

HORACE, Epistles, Bk. i, epis. 1, l. 34. Referring to avarice.

¹⁵ The People's Voice the voice of God we call; And what are proverbs but the People's Voice?

JAMES HOWELL, Before a Great Volume of Proverbs.

¹⁶ Pointed axioms and acute replies fly loose about the world, and are assigned successively to those whom it may be the fashion to celebrate.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Lives of the Poets: Waller.

¹⁷ A maxim is the exact and noble expression of an important and unquestionable truth. (Une maxime est l'expression exacte et noble d'une vérité importante et incontestable.)

JOUBERT, Pensées, No. 137.

¹⁸ A proverb is no proverb to you till life has illustrated it.

KRATZ, Letters, p. 305.

¹⁹ As I pass through my incarnations in every age and race,

I make my proper prostrations to the Gods of the Market Place.

Peering through reverent fingers, I watch them flourish and fall,

And Gods of the Copybook Headings, I notice, outlast them all.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Gods of the Copybook Headings.

We were living in trees when they met us. They showed us each in turn

That Water would certainly wet us, as Fire would certainly burn:

But we found them lacking in Uplift, Vision and Breadth of Mind,
So we left them to teach the Gorillas while we followed the March of Mankind. . . .

As it will be in the future, it was at the birth of Man—

There are only four things certain since Social Progress began:—

That the Dog returns to his Vomit and the Sow returns to her mire,
And the burnt Fool's bandaged finger goes wabbling back to the fire.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Gods of the Copybook Headings.

1 Nothing is so useless as a general maxim.
MACAULAY, Essays: Machiavelli.

2 Proverbs are the wisdom of the streets.
W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 828.

Copper coinage of wisdom is the way of proverbs.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Sandra Belloni, Ch. 40.

3 A maker of maxims is synonymous with a pessimist. (Maximist, pessimist.)

JOSEPH ROUX, Meditations of a Parish Priest: Prelude.

4 A proverb is one man's wit and all men's wisdom.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL, (MACKINTOSH, Memoirs, Vol. II, p. 473.) Usually quoted, "The wisdom of many, the wit of one."

5 Almost every wise saying has an opposite one, no less wise, to balance it.

GEORGE SANTAYANA, Little Essays, p. 237.

7 The proverb is something musty.
SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, Act iii, sc. 2, l. 359.

For I am proverb'd with a grandsire phrase.

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet, Act i, sc. 4, l. 37.

A most remarkably long-headed, flowing-bearded, and patriarchal proverb.

DICKENS, Martin Chuzzlewit, Ch. 13.

9 Patch grief with proverbs.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, Act v, sc. 1, l. 17.

10 I can tell thee where that saying was born.
SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night, Act i, sc. 5, l. 9.

An old saying, that was a man when King Pepin of France was a little boy.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost, iv, 1, 121.

11 A short saying oft contains much wisdom.
SOPHOCLES, Aletes, Frag. 99.

Much of the wisdom of the world is not wisdom.
EMERSON, Works, Vol. i, p. 155.

12 There is a strong feeling in favor of cowardly and prudential proverbs. . . . Most of our pocket wisdom is conceived for the use of mediocre people, to discourage them from ambitious attempts, and generally console them in their mediocrity.

R. L. STEVENSON, Grabbed Age and Youth.

14 With a little hoard of maxims preaching down a daughter's heart.

TENNYSO, Locksley Hall, l. 94.

Maxims of the mud.

TENNYSO, Merlin and Vivien, l. 49.

15 It is more trouble to make a maxim than it is to do right.

MARK TWAIN, Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar.

16 The maxims of men reveal their characters. (Les maximes des hommes décèlent leur cœur.)

VAUVENARGUES, Réflexions, No. 107.

II—Proverbs and Familiar Sayings*

The proverbs and sayings which follow are grouped alphabetically according to the key word. Only those are included here which do not fall naturally under other subject headings. "The great refusal" (il gran rifiuto), for example, will be found under Refusal.

17 I will tell you in verse the cities, names, and sayings of the seven sages:

Cleobulus of Lindus said, "Moderation is best." (Mέτρον ἀρίστον.)

Chilon in hollow Lacedæmon said, "Know thyself." (Γνώθι σεαυτόν.)

Periander, who dwelt in Corinth, said, "Master anger." (Σκόλου κραιπνέιν.)

Pittacus, who was from Mytilene, said, "Nothing in excess." (Οὐδέν ἄγαν.)

And Solon, in holy Athens, "Look at the end of life." (Τέρας ἔ' ἔσθ' βίωται.)

Bias of Priene declared that "Most men are bad." (Τοὺς πλείους κακοὺς.)

And Thales of Miletus said, "Shun suretyship." (Ἐγγύην φεύγειν.)

UNKNOWN. (Greek Anthology, Bk. ix, epig. 366.)

* Only a few of the best known and most important proverbs have been included in this book. Any one interested in pursuing the subject further should consult the source-books. One of the most important of these is the collection of Latin proverbs (Sententiae), including many translations from the Greek, made by Publilius Syrus, about 40 B. C. Erasmus also made a noteworthy collection (Adagia), translated into English by Richard Taverner in 1539. The principal early English collections are: John Heywood, Proverbs (1546); John Florio, First Fruits (1578), and Second Fruits (1591); George Herbert, Jacula Prudentium (1640); James Howell, Proverbs (1659); John Ray, English Proverbs (1670); Thomas Fuller, Gnomologia (1732). There are, of course, many modern collections.

¹ "You I love, and you alone."
 "And so in love says every one."
 "Virtue alone is an estate."
 "But money's virtue, gold is fate."
 "I scorn your gold, and yet I love."
 "I'm poor; let's see how kind you'll prove."
 "Let love alone be our debate."
 "She loves enough that does not hate."
 DANIEL DEFOE, Moll Flanders, p. 103. Moll and one of her lovers are capping proverbs.

² As Love and I late harbour'd in one inn,
 With proverbs thus each other entertain:
 "In love there is no lack," thus I begin;
 "Fair words make fools," replieth he again;
 "Who spares to speak doth spare to speed," quoth I;
 "As well," saith he, "too forward as too slow";
 "Fortune assists the boldest," I reply;
 "A hasty man," quoth he, "ne'er wanted woe";
 "Labour is light where love," quoth I, "doth pay";
 Saith he, "Light burden's heavy, if far borne";
 Quoth I, "The main lost, cast the by away";
 "Y'have spun a fair thread," he replies in scorn.
 And having thus awhile each other thwarted
 Fools as we met, so fools again we parted.
 MICHAEL DRAYTON, Proverbs.

³ A. E. I. O. U.
 FREDERICK III, Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (1415-1493), had these vowels stamped upon coins and medals and inscribed upon public buildings. They were originally used at the coronation of his predecessor, Albert II, signifying, "Albertus Electus Imperator Optamus Vivat." After Frederick's coronation, the motto was changed to "Archidux Electus Imperator Optime Vivat." Still later to "Austria est imperare orbi universo" (German, "Alles Erdreich ist Oesterreich unterthan"), Austria is to rule the whole universe.

⁴ "He must be a first-rater," said Sam. "A 1," replied Mr. Roker.

DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 41.

He was six foot o' man, A 1,
 Clear grit an' human natur'.
 J. R. LOWELL, The Courtin'.

⁵ I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord.

New Testament: Revelation, i, 8. Alpha is the first and Omega the last letter of the Greek alphabet.

I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

New Testament: Revelation, xii, 13.

I am not the first, and shall not be the last.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs. From the Latin proverb, "Primus non sum nec imus."

Undoubtedly you have not been the first, and you will not be, as I suppose, the last.

(Vous n'avez pas été sans doute la première, Et vous ne serez pas, que je crois, la dernière.)

MOLIÈRE, Dépit Amoureux. Act ii, sc. 9, l. 57.

⁶ Apache; les Apaches.

STODDARD DEWEY. Dewey suggested this name, in 1890, to a French reporter seeking a phrase to describe the La Chapelle gang of desperadoes who were terrorizing Paris.

⁷ To hold by the apron strings.

B

⁸ Between you and me and the bed-post, young master has quarrelled with old master.

BULWER-LYTTON, Eugene Aram. Bk. iv, ch. 1.

Between you and me and the general post.
 DICKENS, Nicholas Nickleby. Ch. 10.

⁹ You whirled them to the back of beyond.
 SCOTT, The Antiquary.

¹⁰ We saw a knot of others, about a baker's dozen.
 RABELAIS, Works, Bk. v, ch. 22. A baker's dozen is thirteen for twelve. At one time a heavy penalty was inflicted on bakers for short weight, and consequently they added a surplus number of loaves, called the inbread, to avoid all risk of incurring the fine. The thirteenth was the "vantage loaf."

The pleasant institution of napa—the petty gratuity added by the dealer to anything bought—grew the pleasanter, drawn out into Gallicized lagnappe.

G. W. CARLE, Creeoles of Louisiana. Ch. 16. More usually spelled lagnappe, and in current use in the South, especially Louisiana.

¹¹ That bates Bannagher!

WILLIAM CARLETON, Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry: Three Tasks. (1830)

That bangs Banagher!

WILLIAM BLACK, White Heather. Ch. 40. (1885)

This beats Bannagher.

W. B. YEATS, Fairy Tales of the Irish Peasantry, p. 196.

Banagher is a village in King's Co., on the Shannon. When anything very unusual or unexpected occurs, the people say, "Well, that bangs Banagher!"

P. W. JOYCE, English As We Speak It.

¹² All my eye and Betty Martin.

CARR, Craven Dialect, i, 128. A retort to anyone trying to humbug.

Who was Betty Martin, and wherefore should she be so often mentioned in connection with my precious eye or yours?

SOUTHEY, The Doctor. Ch. 125.

Only your eye and Miss Elizabeth Martin.

PLANCHÉ, Extravaganzas, iv, 158.

1 Big-endians and Little-endians.

JONATHAN SWIFT, Gulliver's Voyage to Lilliput.

The controversy was as to whether a boiled egg should be broken at the big or little end. Big-endians signified the Catholics and Little-endians the Protestants.

2 The Blue Ribbon of the Turf.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, referring to the Derby. (Life of Lord George Bentinck.)

3 Talking of boots. (À propos de bottes.)

REUNARD, Le Distrain. A French proverb, applied to sayings or doings which are without motive or relevance. Said to have arisen in the time of Francis I, when a man who had been decided against (debouté) in a lawsuit, told the king that he had been "debotté" (debooted).

4 Now Dragon could kill a wolf in a brace of shakes.

CHARLES READE, The Cloister and the Hearth. Ch. 93.

5 The green new broom sweepeth clean.

HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 1. (1546)

Ab, well I wot that a new broom sweepeth clean.

JOHN LYL, Euphuus, p. 89. (1579)

6 His palfrey was as brown as a berry.

CHAUCER, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 207. (c. 1386)

Thy nose is as brown as a berry.

JOHN TATHAM, Love Crowns the End. (1640)

7 For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all.

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act v, sc. 2, l. 2.

8 A Big Butter-and-Egg Man.

TEXAS GUINAN, introducing from the floor of her night club in New York a generous stranger who, one night in 1924, paid all the cover charges and distributed $50 bills to the entertainers, and who refused to reveal his name, remarking only that he was in the dairy produce business. The phrase became popular as a designation for a reckless spender or a financial "angel," and was used by George Kaufman as the title for a comedy produced in 1925.

9 Your cake is dough, and all your fat in the fire.

THOMAS BECON, Prayers, 277. (1559)

My cake is dough.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act v, sc. 1, l. 145. (1594)

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 7. (1546)

Others set carts before the horses.

RABELAIS, Works. Bk. v, ch. 22.

To make the plough go before the horse.

JAMES I, Letter to the Lord Keeper, July, 1617.

It is folly to put the plough in front of the oxen.

(Folie est mettre la charrue devant les bœufs.)

RABELAIS, Works. Bk. ii, ch. 11.

11 But catch who (that catch might).

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis. Bk. vii, l. 4422. (c. 1390)

They catch that catch may, keep and hold fast.

JOHN SKELTON, Magnificence, l. 1773. (1520)

There's catch as catch can, hit or miss, luck is all.

KANE O'HARA, Midas. Act ii, sc. 8. (1761)

12 Carthage should be destroyed. (Delenda est Carthago.)

MARCUS CATO, who ended every speech in the Roman Senate with the words, "Ceterum censeo Carthaginem esse delendam." (PLUTARCH, Lives: Marcus Cato. Ch. 27, sec. 1. The Greek is: Καρχηδόνα μὴ εἶναι.)

13

If I can give that Cerberus a sop, I shall be at rest for one day.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, Love for Love. Act i, sc. 1. Cerberus, in Roman mythology, is the three-headed dog which guards the entrance to the infernal regions. Whenever a person died, a cake was placed in his hand, to be used as a sop to Cerberus, so that the dead might pass without molestation.

To Cerberus they give a sop

His triple barking mouth to stop.

SWIFT, On Poetry, l. 213.

These realms huge Cerberus makes ring with his triple-throated baying, his monstrous bulk crouching in the cavern opposite. To him, seeing the snakes now bristling on his neck, the seer flung a morsel drowsy with honey and drugged meal. . . . The warder buried in sleep, Æneas wins the entrance, and swiftly leaves the bank of that stream whence none return. (Melle soporatum et medicatis frugibus offam Obicit.)

VERGIL, Æneid. Bk. vi, l. 417.

14

'Tis as cheap sitting as standing.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. i.

15

I believe he would make three bits of a cherry. (Je croy qu'il feroit d'une cerise trois morceaux.)

RABELAIS, Works. Bk. v, ch. 28.

The old rule of never to make two bites of a cherry.

WILLIAM MACINTYRE, O'Doherty's Maxims, 69. (1824)

Two Bites of a Cherry.

- 12 I do not know the lady, but damn her at a venture.
CHARLES LAMB, to an insufferable fellow-guest at a dinner, who was inquiring persistently as to Lamb's acquaintance with persons of note: "Do you know So-and-So? Do you know Thus-and-That? Do you know Miss —?" "No, madam, I do not," Lamb replied, "but damn her at a venture." (See LUCAS, Charles Lamb. Vol. i, p. 440.)
- 13 Then all the children of Israel went out, and the congregation was gathered together as one man from Dan even unto Beersheba.
Old Testament: Judges, xx, 1.
- 14 After us the deluge. (Après nous le déluge.)
MADAME DE POMPADOUR, to LOUIS XV, after the French defeat at Rossbach, 5 Nov., 1757. The attribution is by J. B. D. Després, in an essay on Madame de Pompadour, in Mémoires de Madame de Hausset, p. xix. Sainte-Beuve and La Tour also attribute the saying to her, but LAROUSSE, Fleurs Historiques, attributes it to the King. It was original with neither, for it is an old French proverb cited in many collections, and usually applied to spendthrifts.
Where's Brummel? Dish'd. Where's Long Pole Wellesley? Diddled.
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xi, st. 77.
- 15 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet, for a testimony against them.

PLAUTUS, Capituli, l. 81.
¹⁶ Out of the frying-pan into the fire. (Pervenimus igitur de calcaria in carbonarium.)
TERTULLIAN, De Carne Christi. Ch. 6.
But as the flounder doth . . .
Leap out of the frying pan into the fire.
JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 5. (1546)

Leap they like a flounder out of a frying-pan into the fire.

SIR THOMAS MORE, Works, p. 179. (1557)

But I was saved, as is the flounder, when He leaptth from the dish into the fire

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Orlando Furioso. Bk. xii, st. 28. (1591)

As Æsop's fishes, they leap from the frying-pan into the fire itself

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. i, sec. 4, mem. 1 (1621)

As the saying is, the people who would avoid the slavery of freemen, which is smoke and appearance, has fallen under the tyranny of slaves, which is fire.

PLATO, The Republic. Sec. 569.

To leap out of the hall into the kitchen, or out of Christ's blessing into the warm sun.

JOHN PALSGRAVE, Acolastus. Sig. 113 (1540)

The proverb refers to the haste of the congregation to leave the church after the benediction has been pronounced

Good king, thou must approve the common saw, That out of heaven's benediction comest To the warm sun!

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 166

Out of God's blessing into the warm sun.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, bk. 3, ch. 4.

Motteux takes the saying to mean "Out of the trying pan into the fire," which is an error. "From better to worse" would be nearer its meaning.

I'll make the fur Fly 'bout the ears of the old cur

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto iii, l. 278.

G

Higher than Gilderoy's kite.

Said to be an allusion to the high gallows on which a notorious robber, Patrick McGregor, alias Gilderoy, was hanged at Edinburgh, July, 1638, from which his body looked like a kite.

They hung him high aboon the rest, He was sae trim a boy;

There died the youth whom I loved best, My handsome Gilderoy.

UNKNOWN, Gilderoy. (PERCY, Reliques. Ser. i, bk. iii, No. 12.) The greater the crime the higher the gallows was at one time a practical legal axiom.

Add to golden numbers golden numbers.

THOMAS DEKKER, Patient Grissell. Act i, sc. 1.

Gone, glimmering.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto ii, st. 2.

By all that's good and glorious.

BYRON, Sardanapalus. Act i, sc. 2.

But for the grace of God there goes John Bradford.

JOHN BRADFORD, on seeing some criminals on the way to execution, c. 1553. A traditional ascription. (See Dictionary of National Biography, vol. vi, p. 159.) The saying has been incorrectly attributed to John Bunyan and to John Wesley.

But for this whoreson cutting of throats, it goes a little against the grain.

DRAIDEN, Amboyne. Act i, sc. 1. (1673)

Hither, though much against the grain, The Dean has carried Lady Jane

SWIFT, Works. Vol. 14, p. 250 (c. 1730)

Which again, naturally, rubs against the grain of Mr. Bazzard.

DICKENS, Edwin Drood. Ch. 20.

I will go against the hair in all things, so I may please thee in any thing

JOHN LYLY, Euphues, p. 394. (1580)

He is . . . merly against the hair

SHAKESPEARE, Titus and Cressida. Act i, sc. 2, l. 26. (1609)

The more he thought on't, the madder he grew,

Until he vowed by the great horn spoon, Unless they did the thing that was right,

He'd give them a licking, and that pretty soon

UNKNOWN, French Claim (McCARTY, National Song Book, 1, 222 1842)

Sez Mr. Foote,

"I should like to shoot

The holl gang, by the gret horn spoon!" sez he.

¹⁰ Tell that to the marines—the sailors won't believe it.

SCOTT, Redgauntlet, Ch. 13. Quoted as an old saying. TROLLOPE, The Small House at Allington. Right—that will do for the marines.

BYRON, The Island, Canto ii, st. 21.

Henceforth, whenever we cast doubt upon a tale that lacketh likelihood, we will tell it to the marines. If they believe it, it is safe to say it is true.

W. P. DUNN, English novelist, in the preface to his The Tadpole of an Archangel, The Petrified Eye, and Other Stories (1904), relates how Charles II said this to Samuel Pepys, after hearing a tall story about some flying fish. See also APPENDIX, p. 2283:4.

¹⁵ Let us return to the sheep: i. e., to the subject. (Revenons à nos moutons.)

PIERRE BLANCHET, La Force de Maître Pierre Patelin, l. 1291. (c. 1460) Used also by Brucey in his L'Avocat Patelin, taken from Blanchet's play. In the play, a cloth-dealer prosecutes his shepherd for stealing some of his sheep, and employs the advocate Patelin, but perceives, as he is in the midst of his evidence, that the advocate is wearing a suit made of stolen cloth. He is so troubled by this that his mind keeps wandering from the stolen sheep to the stolen cloth, while the judge tries to keep him to his story by adjuring him, "Revenons à nos moutons." As mouton is French for both sheep and mutton, British waggery (or ignorance) has transformed the phrase into, "Let us stick to our muttons."

Let us get back to our sheep. (Retournons à nos moutons.)

7 The phrase would be more german to the matter, if we could carry cannon by our sides.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act v, sc. 2, l. 165.

8 A hit, a very palpable hit.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act v, sc. 2, l. 292.

9 God save the mark!

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act i, sc. 3, l. 56.

10 If he fall in, good night!

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act i, sc. 3, l. 194.

This wicked world was once my dear delight;
Now all my conquests, all my charms, good night!

POPE, The Wife of Bath: Prologue, l. 225.

11 Nay, I will; that's flat.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act i, sc. 3, l. 218.

I'll not march through Coventry with them,
that's flat.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 42.

That's flat.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act iii,
sc. 1, l. 102.

12 I know a trick worth two of that.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 41.

13 Not an inch further.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 117.

14 Show it a fair pair of heels.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act ii, sc. 4, l. 53.

15 I sent him Bootless home.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 66.

16 Let me tell the world.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act v, sc. 2, l. 66.

17 Away, you scullion! you rampallion! you fustilarian!

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 63.

18 I'll tickle your catastrophe.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 66.

19 With all appliances and means to boot.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 29.

20 Most forcible Feeble.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 179.

21 Under which king, Besonian? speak, or die.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act v, sc. 3, l. 117.

Recruits sent from Spain to Rome were called besogni, because they were in need of everything, from the Italian bisogno, need.

Great men oft die by vile bezonians.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act v, sc. 1, l. 134.

Base and pilfering besognios and marauders.

SCOTT, The Monastery. Ch. 16.

25 Thou shalt see me at Philippi.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar. Act iv, sc. 3, l.

284. This is the warning addressed to Brutus by the ghost of Caesar. The story is told by Plutarch (Lives: Caesar, Ch. 69), where the phantom says, "I am thy evil genius, Brutus, and thou shalt see me at Philippi." ('Ο αἰς, ὁ Πάρις, δαίμων κακὸς ἔχει δὲ με κατὰ Φιλίππους.)

26 Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back.

SHAKESPEARE, King John. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 12.

27 May's new-fangled mirth.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act i,
sc. 1, l. 106.

More new-fangled than an ape.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act iv, sc. 1,
l. 152.

Some [glory] in their garments, though new-fangled ill.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. xci.

28 The rational hind Costard.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act i, sc.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 60. (1600)
- This is the short and the long, and the sum of all.
THOMAS NASH, Death of Martin Mar-Prelate. (1589)
- ¹⁶ O, understand my drift.
SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 251.
- ¹⁷ I will smite his noddles.
SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 128.
- ¹⁸ I can not tell what the dickens his name is.
SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 19.
- ¹⁹ A man of my kidney.
SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor. Act iii, sc. 5, l. 117.
- ²⁰ God speed, fair Helena! whither away?
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act i, sc. 1, l. 180.
- ²¹ Masters, spread yourselves.
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act i, sc. 2, l. 19.
- ²² O spite! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me for your merriment.
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 145.
- You all did see that on the Lupercal
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse.
SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 100.
- "You all" is the Southern plural for you.
UNKNOWN, Nashville Banner, 24 July, 1921.

Five have I slain to-day instead of him.
SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act v, sc. 4, l. 12.
Hence: "Another Richmond in the field."

⁷ Nay, if thy wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done.

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet, Act ii, sc. 4, l. 75. (See Persius, iii, 61: An passim sequeris corvos testa que lutoque.)

Why do you lead me a wild-goose chase?
CERVANTES, Don Quixote, Pt. i, ch. 6.

⁸ I'll not budge an inch.
SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew: Induction. Sc. 1, l. 13.

⁹ Sir, give him head: I know he'll prove a jade.
SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act i, sc. 2, l. 249.

¹⁰ That's but a cavil.
SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 392.

¹¹ Fie, doff this habit, shame to your estate,
An eye-sore to our solemn festival.
SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 102.

¹² Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love.
SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 46.

¹³ From the still-ver'd Bermoothes.
SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest. Act i, sc. 2, l. 219.

¹⁴ We know what belongs to frippery.

²⁶ How old is Ann?
UNKNOWN. In the New York Press, October 16, 1903, appeared the following problem: "Mary is 24 years old. She is twice as old as Ann was when she was as old as Ann is now. How old is Ann now?"

²⁷ His name was George F. Babbitt, and . . . he was nimble in the calling of selling houses for more than people could afford to pay.
SMOLLAH LEWIS, Babbitt, p. 2. (1922)

²⁸ Who hit [or struck] Billy Patterson?
It has been impossible to verify any of the stories which purport to explain this expression. One story is to the effect that in a row at the corner of Baltimore and Charles Streets, Baltimore, a man named Billy Patterson was struck by somebody and went around inquiring "Who hit me?" till it became a joke. Another is that a student at a medical college died from fright during a bazing some eighty years ago, after being struck a mock blow, and at the inquest the great question was "Who struck Billy Patterson?" until it developed that no one had really struck him. Still another version places the locale at Lancaster, Pa.

¹ It's "bold," it's "clever" and it's "cute,"
And so is this my blurb.

GELETT BURGESS, Burgess Unabridged, p. 7.
Blurb: an inspired testimonial; a sound like a publisher.

² Are you a bromide?

GELETT BURGESS. Title of essay. (Smart Set, April, 1906.)

Bromides and Sulphites.

GELETT BURGESS. Two words coined in 1907, the first to indicate the majority of mankind, who all think and talk alike, the latter the select minority who "eliminate the obvious from their conversation."

³ Nothing doing. That's just "baloney." Everybody knows I can't lay bricks.

ALFRED E. SMITH, at the laying of the cornerstone of the New York State Office Building, when asked to permit a motion picture showing him actually laying the brick. His secretary states that "it is impossible to say exactly when the Governor first used the expression 'baloney.'"

I am for gold dollars against baloney dollars. I am for experience against experiment.

ALFRED E. SMITH, Editorial, New Outlook, Dec., 1933, referring to the devaluation experiments of the F. D. Roosevelt administration.

⁴ Bonehead.

CHARLES DRYDEN, reviving an old word, in newspaper article describing the famous play in which Fred Merkle, first baseman of the New York Giants, failed to touch second base in the deciding game of the 1908 championship series, at Polo Grounds, New York City, 23 Sept. The error lost the game for the Giants, and a riot followed. (See SULLIVAN, Our Times. Vol. iii, p. 541.)

⁵ The practice for which W. E. Woodward, in a novel [Bunk] published in 1923, invented the word "debunking."

F. L. ALLEN, Only Yesterday, p. 236.

Bunk is mental junk.

⁶ I acknowledge the corn.

CHARLES A. WICKLIFFE, of Kentucky, in debate in House of Representatives in 1828. (Dr VERR, Americanisms.)

⁷ Gibson has drawn the true American girl. He is the American Du Maurier. . . . As soon as the world saw Gibson's ideal it bowed down in adoration, saying: "Lo, at last the typical American girl." . . . The girls themselves held her as their portrait and strove to live up to the likeness. Thus did nature follow in the footsteps of art and thus did the Gibson girl become legion.

¹⁴ Nifty! (short for magnificent).

BRET HARTE, The Tale of a Pony.

¹⁵ Andrew Jackson, Esq., proved a bill of sale from Hugh McGary to Gasper Mansker, for a negro man, which was O. K.

Archives of Sumner County, Tenn., 6 Oct., 1790. This has long been held to be the first recorded use of O.K., but James Parton suggested in 1859 (Life of Andrew Jackson, vol. 1, p. 136) that O.K. was a misreading of O.R., Order Recorded, and recent investigation has proved this to be the case. Woodrow Wilson preferred to believe that it derived from a Choctaw word, "Okeh," meaning "It is so," and wrote it in that form on papers which had his approval. But the actual origin of the term is quite uncertain.

The People is Oll Korrekt.

4 The Total Depravity of Inanimate Things.

KATHERINE KENT WALKER. Title of essay, Atlantic Monthly, Sept., 1864.

5 We are bound toward the scuppers,
And the time has come to act,
Or we'll both be on our uppers
For a fact!

GUY WETMORE CARRYL, How a Cat Was Annoyed and a Poet Was Booted.

6 As you are not prepared, as the Americans say, to go the whole hog, we will part good friends.

FREDERICK MARRIAT, Japhet, Ch. 54. (1836) Notes and Queries (27 Sept., 1851) says the phrase is of Irish origin, where a shilling is called a "hog," so that "To go the whole hog" means to spend a whole shilling. An editorial writer on the Democratic Press, of Philadelphia, claims to have used it in the summer of 1837. See the Arkansas Advocate, 21 Aug., 1835.

7 Gone where the woodbine twineth.

JAMES FISK. At Congressional investigation of Black Friday, (Sept., 1869), referring to the money he had lost in the attempt to corner gold. When asked what the phrase meant, he is said to have answered, "Up the spout."

PROVIDENCE

I—Providence: Definitions and Apothegms

7a The ways of Heav'n are dark and intricate,
Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Lost and bewild'rd in the fruitless search;
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.

ADDISON, Cato, Act I, sc. 1.

8 Providence labors with quaint instruments, dilapidating Troy by means of a wooden rocking-horse, and loosing sin into the universe through a half-eaten apple.

JAMES BRANCH CABELL, Cream of the Jest, p. 87.

9 He does not, like Bolingbroke, patronise Providence.

CARYLE, Essays: Voltaire.

10 Providence has been called the baptismal name of Chance, but a devout person would say that Chance is a nickname of Providence. (Quelqu'un disait que la Providence était le nom de baptême du Hasard, quelque dévot dira que le Hasard est un sobriquet de la Providence.)

CHAMFORT, Maximes et Pensées, Pt. 1.

11 Providence has a wild, rough, incalculable road to its end, and it is of no use to try to whitewash its huge, mixed instrumentalities, or to dress up that terrific benefactor in a clean shirt and white neckcloth of a student in divinity.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Fate.

A pistareen-Providence, which, whenever the good man wants a dinner, makes that somebody shall knock at his door, and leave a half-dollar.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Fate.

12 What is the operation we call Providence? There lies the unspoken thing, present, omnipresent. Every time we converse we translate it into speech.

Divine power plays with human affairs. (Ludit in humanis divina potentia rebus.)

OVIN, Epistola ex Pontica. Bk. iv, epla. 3, l. 49.

Go, wiser thou! and in thy scale of sense
Weigh thy opinion against Providence;
Call imperfection what thou fanciest such;
Say, here he gives too little, there too much;
Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust.
POPE, Essay on Man. Epis. i, l. 113.

He putteth down one and setteth up another.
Old Testament: Psalms, lxxv, 7.

It is not so with Him that all things knows
As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows;

But must it is presumption in us when
The help of heaven we count the act of men.

III—Providence: Its Beneficence

- 1 Confide ye aye in Providence,
For Providence is kind:
An' bear ye a' life's changes
Wi' a calm an' tranquil mind.
Tho' pressed and hemmed on every side,
Ha'e faith, an' ye'll win through;
For ilka blade o' grass
Keeps its ain drap o' dew.
JAMES BALLANTINE, Its Ain Drap o' Dew.
"Oh! pilot, 'tis a fearful night,
There's danger on the deep!
I'll come and pace the deck with thee,
I do not dare to sleep."
"Go down!" the sailor cried, "go down!
This is no place for thee;
Fear not, but trust in Providence,
Wherever thou mayst be."
THOMAS HAYNES BAYLY, The Pilot.
2 Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust Him for His grace;
Behind a frowning Providence
He hides a smiling face.
COWPER, Light Shining Out of Darkness.
3 We sometimes had those little rubs which Providence sends to enhance the value of its favours.
GOLDSMITH, The Vicar of Wakefield. Ch. 1.
4 We ought to feel deep cheerfulness, as I may say, that a happy Providence kept it from being any worse.
HARDY, Far from the Madding Crowd. Ch. 8.
5 Behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.
J. R. LOWELL, The Present Crisis. St. 8.
6 The lot assigned to every man is suited to him, and suits him to itself.
MARCUS AURELIUS, Meditations. Bk. iii, sec. 4.
God gives to ev'ry man
The virtue, temper, understanding, taste,
That lifts him into life, and lets him fall
Just in the niche he was ordain'd to fill.
COWPER, The Task. Bk. iv, l. 789.
7 Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?
and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father.
New Testament: Matthew, xi, 29.
He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age!
SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 43.
There's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 't is not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all.
SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act v, sc. 2, l. 230.

- 8 Eye me, blest Providence, and square my trial
To my proportion'd strength.
MILTON, Comus, l. 329.
9 The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.
Old Testament: Psalms, cxxi, 6.
10 Come wealth or want, come good or ill,
Let young and old accept their part,
And bow before the Awful Will,
And bear it with an honest heart.
TRACKERAY, The End of the Play.
11 So, darkness in the pathway of Man's life
Is but the shadow of God's providence,
By the great Sun of Wisdom cast thereon;
And what is dark below is light in Heaven.
WHITTIER, Towler, l. 79.
12 While There I seek, protecting Power,
Be my vain wishes stilled;
And may this consecrated hour
With better hopes be filled.
HELEN MARIA WILLIAMS, Trust in Providence.
13 We rather think, with grateful mind sedate,
How Providence educeth, from the spring
Of lawless will, unlooked-for streams of good,
Which neither force shall check nor timeabate.
WORDSWORTH, Miscellaneous Sonnets. Pt. iii,
No. 4. Of Henry VIII.

PRUDENCE

See also Discretion

I.—Prudence: Definitions

- 14 By prudence, which the Greeks call φρόνησις, we understand the practical knowledge of things to be sought, and of things to be avoided. (Prudentiam enim, quam Græci φρόνησις dicunt, aliam quamdam intellegimus, quæ est rerum expetendarum fugieodarumque scientia.)
CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 43, sec. 153.
I prefer silent prudence to loquacious folly. (Malo indisertam prudentiam, quam loquacem stultitiam.)
CICERO, De Oratore. Bk. iii, sec. 35.
15 Prudence is God taking thought for oxen.
EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Prudence.
16 The greatest good is prudence; a more precious thing even than philosophy; for it spring all the other virtues.
EPICURUS, Letter to Menæceus. (DIOGENES
LAËRTIUS, Epicurus. Bk. x, sec. 132.)
17 That man is prudent who neither hopes nor fears anything from the uncertain events of the future.
ANATOLE FRANCE, The Procurator of Judæa.

LORD HALIFAX, Works, p. 245.

² One has no protecting power save prudence. (Nullum numen habes si sit prudentia.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 365; sat. xiv, l. 315.

No divinity is absent if Prudence is present. (Nullum numen abest si sit Prudentia.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 365. Adapted.

II—Prudence: Apothegms

³ Prudence is of no service unless it be prompt.

FRANCIS BACON, De Augmentis Scientiarum: Pt. I, bk. 6. Promptitudo.

⁴ Hearken with your ears that ye may know prudence.

Apocrypha: Baruch, iii, 9. (Douay.)

⁵ Early and provident fear is the mother of safety.

²³ 'Tis good to look before thou leap.

MARTIN PARKER, An Excellent New Medley. (Roxburghe Ballads. 1643.)

²⁴ Try therefore before you trust; look before you leap.

JOHN TRAPP, Commentaries: I Peter. (1660)

Trapp traces the saying back to St. Bernard.

²⁵ Look before you ere you leap,

For as you sow, ye are like to reap.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. ii, canto 2, l. 501. (1664)

²⁶ I love to look before I leap.

STEELE, Tender Husband. Act iii, sc. 2. (1705)

- 1
Look twice before you leap.
CHARLOTTE BROWNÉ, Shirley. Ch. 9. (1849)
- 2
Always wise men go back for to leap the further.
UNKNOWN, Melusine. Ch. 20. (14th century French romance.)
- One must draw back to leap the better. (Il faut reculer pour mieux sauter.)
MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. i, ch. 38.

IV—Prudence: Make Haste Slowly

- 3
Make haste slowly. (Exhibe speditur.)
CÆSAR AUGUSTUS. (AULUS GELLIUS, Noctes Atticæ. Bk. x, ch. 11, sec. 5.) Aulus Gellius says that the Emperor used these two Greek words in conversation and in his letters, "by which he recommended that to accomplish a result we should use at once the promptness of energy and the delay of carefulness." Suetonius (Lives of the Cæsars: The Deified Augustus, xxv, 4) attributes to him the familiar Latin form, "Festina lente." Franklin used it in Poor Richard, April, 1744. The German form is, "Eile mit Weile."

Hasten slowly. (Hâtez-vous lentement.)

BOILEAU, L'Ari Poétique. Canto i, l. 171.

- 6
Festination may prove precipitation; deliberating delay may be wise cunctation.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Christian Morals. Pt. i, sec. 33. Paraphrasing Cæsar Augustus.

- 8
He hasteth well that wisely can abide.
CHAUCER, The Tale of Melibeus. Sec. 13.
Quoted as a proverb, and used also in Troilus and Criseyde, bk. i, l. 956.

V—Prudence: Two Strings to the Bow

- 7
I will well that every man be amorous and love, but that he have two strings on his bow.

WILLIAM CAXTON, Jason, 57. (c. 1477)
'Tis true no lover has that pow'r
To enforce a desperate amour,
As he that has two strings to his bow,
And burns for love and money too.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. iii, canto 1, l. 1.

- 8
I hope you will remember that who seeketh two strings to one bow, he may shoot strong but never straight.

QUEEN ELIZABETH, Letter to James VI. (Letters. No. 10. 1585)

Yes, I had two strings to my bow; both golden ones, egad! and both cracked.

FIELDING, Love in Several Masques. Act v, sc. 13.

- 10
You have many strings to your bow.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 11. (1546)

- 11
Have more strings to thy bow than one; it is safe riding at two anchors.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues, p. 116. (1579)

- 12
In the stormy night it is well that anchors twain be let down from the swift ship.

PINDAR, Olympian Odes. Ode vi, l. 100.

A ship is safer when two cables hold it, and an anxious mother, if she rear twins, has less to dread. (Nam melius duo defendunt retinacula navim, Tutius et geminos anxia mater alit.)
PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. ii, eleg. 22, l. 41.

Good riding at two anchors, men have told,
For if one fail, the tother may hold.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 9. (1546)

- 13
I think it better to have two strings to my bow. (Commodius esse opinor duplici spe utier.)

TERENCE, Phormio, l. 603. (Act iv, sc. 2.)

I will well that every man be amorous and love but that he have two strings on his bow.

WILLIAM CAXTON, Jason, 57. (c. 1477)

It is always good for one to have two strings to his bow.

JOHN FLORIO, First Fruits. Fo. 6. (1578)

So that every man lawfully ordained must bring a bow which hath two strings, a title of present right and another to provide for future possibility or chance.

RICHARD HOOKER, Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity. Bk. v, ch. 80. (1597)

A wise man's bow goes with a two-fold string.

JOHN DAY, He of Gulls. Act ii, sc. 2. (1606)

Archers ever
Have two strings to a bow; and shall great Cupid
(Archer of archers both in men and women),
Be worse provided than a common archer?

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Bury d'Ambois. Act ii, sc. 1. (1607)

'Tis good in every case, you know,
To have two strings unto our bow.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Ghost. Bk. iv, l. 1282. (1761)

Let us not throw the rope after the bucket.
(No arrojemus la sogá tras el caldero.)
CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. II, ch. 9.

They had best not stir the rice, though it sticks to the pot.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. II, ch. 37.

Never put thy thumbs between two back teeth.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. II, ch. 43.

Between the tree and your finger never put the bark.
(Entre l'arbre et le doigt il ne faut point mettre l'écorce.)

MOLIERE, Le Médecin Malgré Lui. Act I, sc. 2.
Referred to as a saying of Cicero.

The branch is better that bowen will to wind Than that that breaks.

CHAUCER, Troilus and Criseyde. Bk. I, l. 257.
(c. 1374)

Rather to bow than break is profitable;
Humility is a thing commendable.

UNKNOWN, Moral Proverbs of Christian. (1390)

Better is to bow than break.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. I, ch. 9. (1546)

I bend and do not break. (Je plie et ne romps pas.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables. Bk. I, fah. 22.

If thou meet a red man and a bearded woman, greet them three mile off.

JOHN FLOKIO, First Fables. Fo. 30. (1578)

The red is wise, the brown trusty,
The pale envious, and the black lusty. . . .

To a red man read thy rede,
With a brown man break thy bread,
At a pale man draw thy knife,
From a black man keep thy wife.

Think on the means, the manner, and the end.

SIR JOHN DENHAM, Of Prudence.

¹⁷ Looking before and after.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iv, sc. 4, l. 37.

Shakespeare says, we are creatures that look before and after, the more surprising that we do not look round a little and see what is passing under our very eyes.

CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. i, ch. 1.

¹⁸ Ay, and you had any eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels than fortunes before you.

²⁰ You have only, when before your glass, to keep pronouncing to yourself nimini-pimini; the lips cannot help taking their plie.

JOHN BURROUGHS, The Herveys. Act iii, sc. 2.

Father is rather vulgar, my dear. The word Papa, besides, gives a very pretty form to the lips. Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes, and prism are all very good words for the lips; especially prunes and prism. You will find it serviceable, in the formation of a demeanour, if you sometimes say to yourself in company—on entering a room, for instance—Papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes and prism, prunes and prism.

OVIN, Amores. Bk. ii, eleg. 1, l. 3.

6 What is Prudery? 'Tis a beldam, Seen with Wit and Beauty seldom. . . .
'Tis a virgin hard of feature,
Old, and void of all good-nature;
Lean and fretful; would seem wise,
Yet plays the fool before she dies.

POPE, Answer to Mrs. Howe.

Every thing nat'ral, and easy, and true, is ca'd coarse.

JOHN WILSON, Noctes Ambrosianæ. Ch. 26.

7 Comstockery is the world's standing joke at the expense of the United States. It confirms the deep-seated conviction of the Old World that America is a provincial place, a second-rate town civilization, after all.

BERNARD SHAW, Interview, N. Y. Times, 26 Sept., 1905, commenting upon the action of the New York Public Library in relegating his Mon and Superman to the reserved shelves, an action which he thought Anthony Comstock had inspired. It was Comstock who had complained to the police of Shaw's play, Mrs. Warren's Profession, in 1904, and caused it to be closed.

9 The great art in writing advertisements is the finding out a proper method to catch the reader's eye; without which a good thing may pass over unobserved, or be lost among commissions of bankrupt.

ADDISON, The Tatler. No. 224.

Advertisements are of great use to the vulgar. First of all, as they are instruments of ambition. A man that is by no means big enough for the Gazette, may easily creep into the advertisements; by which means we often see an apothecary in the same paper of news with a plenipotentiary, or a running footman with an ambassador.

PUN

I—Puns: Their Faults and Virtues

13 The seeds of punning are in the minds of all men, and though they may be subdued by reason, reflection, and good sense, they will be very apt to shoot up in the greatest genius.

ADDISON, The Spectator. No. 61.

A turn for punning, call it Attic salt.

BYRON, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, l. 68.

14 But still a pun I do detest,
'Tis such a paltry, humbug jest;
They who've least wit can make them best.
WILLIAM COMRAE, Dr. Syntax in Search of the Picturesque. Canto xxv.

15 A man who could make so vile a pun would not scruple to pick a pocket.

JOHN DENNIS. (Gentleman's Magazine. Vol. II, p. 324.)

5 How every fool can play upon the word!
SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice, Act
III, sc. 5, l. 48.

6 I have mentioned puns. They are, I believe, what I have denominated them—the wit of words. They are exactly the same to words which wit is to ideas, and consist in the sudden discovery of relations in language.

SYDNEY SMITH, Sketches of Moral Philosophy,
Lecture 10.

Puns are in very bad repute. . . . The wit of words is so miserably inferior to the wit of ideas that it is very deservedly driven out of good company.

14 He had stiff knees, the Puritan,
That were not good at bending.

J. R. LOWELL, An Interview with Miles Standish. St. 12.

15 Puritanism, believing itself quick with the seed of religious liberty, laid, without knowing it, the egg of democracy.

J. R. LOWELL, Among My Books: New England Two Centuries Ago.

Puritanism meant something when Captain Hodgson, riding out to battle through the morning mist, turns over the command of his troop to a lieutenant, and stays to hear the prayer of a cornet, there was "so much of God in it."

J. R. LOWELL, Among My Books: New England Two Centuries Ago.

¹ The Puritan hated bear-baiting, not because it gave pain to the bear, but because it gave pleasure to the spectators.

MACAULAY, History of England. Vol. i, ch. 2. Even bear-baiting was esteemed heathenish and unchristian: the sport of it, not the inhumanity, gave offence.

HUME, History of England. Vol. i, ch. 62.

² As Puritans they prominently wax,
And none more kindly gives and takes hard knocks.

Strong psalmic chanting, like to nasal cocks,
They join to thunderings of their hearty thwacks.

But naughtiness, with hoggerly, not lacks.

GEORGE MEREDITH, A Certain People.

³ What the Puritans gave the world was not thought, but action.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech. 21 Dec., 1855.

The Puritan did not stop to think; he recognized God in his soul, and acted.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech. 18 Dec., 1859.

⁴ The Puritan was not a man of speculation. He originated nothing. His principles are to be found broadcast in the centuries behind him. His speculations were all old. . . . The distinction between his case and that of others was simply that he practised what he believed.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, The Puritan Principle.

⁵ Old times were changed, old manners gone;
A stranger filled the Stuarts' throne;
The bigots of the iron time
Had called his harmless art a crime.

SCOTT, The Lay of the Last Minstrel: Introduction.

⁶ Maria: Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of puritan.

Sir Andrew: O, if I thought that, I 'ld beat him like a dog!

Maria: What, for being a puritan?

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 151.

But one puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to hornpipes.

SHAKESPEARE, Winter's Tale. Act iv, sc. 3, l. 46.

⁸ Of the nature of the sun, which passeth through pollutions, and itself remains as pure as before.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. ii.

Yes—for a spirit, pure as hers,
Is always pure, even while it errs;
As sunshine, broken in the rill,
Though turned astray, is sunshine still.

THOMAS MOORE, Lalla Rookh: The Fire-Worshippers.

⁹ The pure soul
Shall mount on native wings, disdain little sport,

And cut a path into the heaven of glory,
Leaving a track of light for men to wonder at.

¹⁶ Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

New Testament; Matthew, v, 8.

Blest are the pure in heart,
For they shall see our God.

JOHN KEBLE, The Christian Year: The Purification.

Still to the lowly soul
He doth Himself impart,
And for His cradle and His throne
Chooseth the pure in heart.
JOHN KEBLE, The Christian Year: The Purification.

For in heaven there's a lodge, and St. Peter keeps the door,
And none can enter in but those that are pure.

¹¹ Whether or not the world would be vastly benefited by a total banishment from it of all intoxicating drinks seems not now an open question. Three-fourths of mankind confess the affirmative with their tongues, and I believe all the rest acknowledge it in their hearts.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Address, before the Washington Society of Springfield, Ill., 22 Feb., 1842.

Prohibition will work great injury to the cause of temperance. It is a species of intemperance within itself, for it goes beyond the bounds of reason, in that it attempts to control a man's appetite by legislation and makes a crime out of things that are not crimes.

Statement attributed to ABRAHAM LINCOLN, in handbill circulated in 1837, during a campaign to close saloons. In Wet Slanders of Abraham Lincoln, by Albert Porter, the author says that a copy of this handbill was sent to Lincoln's biographers, Nicolay and Hay, and they declared that they were unable to discover the statement in any of his papers or speeches. Every Evening, 12 Feb., 1926, states that there are affidavits extant to the effect that Col. John B. Goodwin, of Atlanta, Ga., admitted he had fabricated the statement.

PROMISE

I—Promise: Apothegms

Promise is most given when the least is said.
GEORGE CHAPMAN, Hero and Leander, l. 234.

Promise is debt.

CHAUCER, Man of Law's Tale: Prologue.

There was never promise made, but it was broken or kept.

QUEEN ELIZABETH. (JOHN DEE, Diary, p. 37.)

A man apt to promise is apt to forget.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia, No. 271.

He promises like a merchantman and pays like a man-of-war.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia, No. 2007.

You never bade me hope, 'tis true;

I asked you not to swear:

But I looked in those eyes of blue,

And read a promise there.

GERALD GRIFFIN, You Never Bade Me Hope.

Promise is a promise, dough you make it in de dark er de moon.

JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS, Nights with Uncle Remus, Ch. 39.

Some persons make promises for the pleasure of breaking them.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Characteristics, p. 143.

Many promises impair confidence. (Multa fidem promissa levant.)

HORACE, Epistles, Bk. II, ep. 2, l. 10.

Ah! what a fine promise La Châtre has! (Ah! le bon billet qu'a La Châtre!)

NINON DE L'ENCLOS, when taking another lover, after promising the Marquis de La Châtre to be faithful to him in his absence. "It became," says Sainte-Beuve, "a proverb upon empty assurances."

A promise to men in grief is lightly broken.

JOHN MASKFIELD, The Wild Swan.

Be sure to promise: what harm is there in promises? In promises anyone can be rich. (Promittas facito: quid enim promittere lædit? Pollicitis dives quilibet esse potest.)

OWID, Ars Amatoria, Bk. I, l. 443. The way to win a woman.

Promise, promise; want for no promising.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Monsieur d'Olive, Act III, sc. 1.

Promise, large promise, is the soul of an advertisement.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Idler, No. 40.

To promise seas and mountains. (Maria montisque polliceri.)

SALLUST, Catiline, Ch. xliii, sec. 3.

Promising mountains of gold. (Montis auri pollicens.)

TERENCE, Phormio, l. 68.

Promises and pie-crust are made to be broken.
SWIFT, Polite Conversation, Dial. I.

Fair promises avail but little,

Like too rich pie-crust, they're so brittle.

EDWARD WARD, Hudibras Redivivus, Pt. v, canto vii, l. 9.

II—Promise and Performance

If we've promised them aught, let us keep our promise!

ROBERT BROWNING, The Pied Piper, Pt. xv.

Great promise, small performance.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Epigrams, Cent. v, No. 10.

Those who are quick to promise are generally slow to perform.

C. H. SPURGEON, Ploughman's Pictures, 18.

Half the promises people say were never kept were never made.

E. W. HOWE, Howe's Monthly.

We promise according to our hopes, and perform according to our fears. (Nous promettons selon nos espérances, et nous tenons selon nos craintes.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes, No. 38.

Fair words fat few; great promises without performance, delight for the time, but irk ever after.

JOHN LYLY, Euphuus and His England, p. 476.

1 Their promises, but, those obtained, weak pignies
In their performance.

2 MASINGER, Great Duke of Florence. Act ii, sc. 3.

2 Begin to supplement your promises with deeds. (Incipe pollicitis addere facta tuis.)

OVID, Amores. Bk. ii, eleg. 16, l. 48.

His presents are falling short of his promises. (Quia non suppetunt dictis data.)

PLAUTUS, Asinaria, l. 56. (Act i, sc. 1.)

3 Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens
That one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry VI. Act i, sc. 6, l. 6.

He was ever precise in promise-keeping.

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure, i, 2, 76.

And though he promise to his loss,

He makes his promise good.

TATE AND BRADY, Psalms XV.

4 His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 41.

Promising is the very air o' the time; it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of use.

SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens. Act v, sc. 1, l. 24.
He will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brab-bler the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, v, 1, 97.

6 And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That paiter with us in a double sense:

That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act v, sc. 8, l. 19.

6 They promise mountains, and perform molehills.

C. H. SPURGEON, Ploughman's Pictures, 18.

6a The righteous promise little and perform much; the wicked promise much and perform not even a little.

Babylonian Talmud: Baba Metsia, p. 87a.

PROOF

7 What is now proved was once only imagin'd.
WILLIAM BLAKE, Proverbs of Hell.

8 The proof of the pudding is the eating.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 24.

9 Compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses.

New Testament: Hebrews, xii, 1.

10 We must never assume that which is incapable of proof.

G. H. LEWIS, Physiology of Common Life. Ch. 13.

11 You cannot demonstrate an emotion or prove an aspiration.

JOHN MORLEY, Rousseau, p. 402.

12 The event proves the act. (Exitus acta probat.)

OVID, Heroides. Eleg. ii, l. 85. Adopted as a motto by George Washington.

13 For when one's proofs are aptly chosen,
Four are as valid as four dozen.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Alma. Canto i, l. 514.

14 He who furnishes a voucher for his statements argues himself unknown. (Qui notorem dat, ignotus est.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epis. 39, sec. 2.

15 Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh
And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter?

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 188.

Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it;
therefore deny it not.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 156.

16 To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more wider and more overt test
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods
Of modern seeming do prefer against him.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act i, sc. 3, l. 106.

Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 360.

See also under EYE.

Where are the evidence that do accuse me?

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act i, sc. 4, l. 188.

17 For nothing worthy proving can be proven,
Nor yet disproven.

TENNYSON, The Ancient Sage, l. 66.

18 Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.

New Testament: I Thessalonians, v, 21.

19 Some circumstantial evidence is very strong,
as when you find a trout in the milk.

H. D. THOREAU, Journal, 11 Nov., 1850.

PROPERTY

See also POSSESSIONS

20 That man does not possess his estate; his estate possesses him.

BURTON, of a niggardly rich man. (DISPOSSESS)

LAERTIUS, Biom. Bk. iv, sec. 50.)

If a man owns land, the land owns him.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Wealth.

My cow milks me.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. v, p. 406.

The power of perpetuating our property in our families is one of the most valuable and interesting circumstances belonging to it, and that which tends the most to the perpetuation of society itself.

EDMUND BURKE, Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Property has its duties as well as its rights.

THOMAS DRUMMOND, Letter to the Landlords of Tipperary, 22 May, 1838. "The letter was jointly composed by Wolfe, Drummond and Chief Baron Pigot, and none of them was afterwards able to say who suggested the celebrated phrase."—McLENNAN, Memoir of Thomas Drummond, p. 338. It is usually credited to Drummond, and is engraved on the pedestal of his statue in the City Hall, Dublin. Disraeli appropriated the phrase without credit in his novel, Sybil, bk. ii, ch. 11.

We mustn't forget that property has duties even if other people forget that it has rights.

HENRY ARTHUR JONES, The Triumph of the Philistines. Act i.

Some people talk of morality, and some of religion, but give me a little snug property.

MARIA EDGEWORTH, The Absentee. Ch. 2.

Whence you obtain your property no one inquires, but it is necessary that you have it. (Unde habebas quaerit nemo; sed oportet habere.)

ENNIUS. (JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. xiv, l. 206.)

How you get it, that is the question; whether by right or by wrong. (Quo modo habebas, id refert, jurene ane injuria.)

PLAUTUS, Rudens, l. 1069. (Act iv, sc. 4.)

I don't care how, as long as I get it. (Mea nil refert, dum potiar modo.)

TERENCE, Eunuchus, l. 320. (Act ii, sc. 3.)

See also MONEY: MAKING MONEY.

What we call real estate—the solid ground to build a house on—is the broad foundation on which nearly all the guilt of this world rests.

HAWTHORNE, The House of the Seven Gables: The Flight of the Two Outs.

Endeavor vigorously to increase your property. (Rem strenuus auge.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, ep. 7, l. 71.

Rich in lands, rich in money put out to usury. (Dives agris, dives positus in faenore nummis.)

HORACE, Art Poetica, l. 421; Satires, i, 2, 13.

The personal right to acquire property, which is a natural right, gives to property, when acquired, a right to protection, as a social right.

JAMES MASON, Writings. Vol. iv, p. 51.

Worth now lies in what a man is worth; property gives honors, property brings friendships; everywhere the poor man is trodden down.

PROPHECY AND PROPHETS

(In pretio pretium nunc est; dat census honores, Census amicitias; pauper ubique jacet.)
OVID, Fasts. Bk. i, l. 217.

Property is theft. (La propriété, c'est le vol.)
P. J. PROUDHON, Principle of Right. Ch. 1.

Exclusive property is a theft against nature. (La propriété exclusive est un vol dans la nature.)

JEAN PIERRE BRISSOT.

Property, says Prudhon, is theft. That is the only perfect truism that has been uttered on the subject.

BERNARD SHAW, Maxims for Revolutionists.

Whether we force the man's property from him by pinching his stomach, or pinching his fingers, makes some difference anatomically; morally, none whatsoever.

RUSKIN, The Two Paths. Lect. v, sec. 3.

Property assures what toil acquires.

RICHARD SAVAGE, Of Public Spirit, l. 39.

My son! the road the human being travels, . . .
Curves round the cornfield and the hill of vines,

Honouring the holy bounds of property!

SCHILLER, Die Piccolomini. Act i, sc. 4. (Coleridge, tr.)

Lord of thy presence and no land beside.

SHAKESPEARE, King John. Act i, sc. 1, l. 137.

Don't thou 'ear my 'erse's legs, as they canters awa'ay?

Property, property, property—that's what I 'ears them saay.

TENNYSON, Northern Farmer, New Style. St. 1.

Give a man the secure possession of a bleak rock, and he will turn it into a garden; give him a nine years' lease of a garden, and he will convert it into a desert. . . . The magic of property turns sand into gold.

ARTHUR YOUNG, Travels in France, 30 July, and 7 Nov., 1787.

PROPHECY AND PROPHETS

I—Prophecy

The passion of prying into futurity makes a striking part of the history of human nature.

ROBERT BURNS, Hallowe'en: Introduction.

Of all the horrid, hideous notes of woe,
Sadder than owl-songs or the midnight blast,
Is that portentous phrase, "I told you so,"
Utter'd by friends, those prophets of the past.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xiv, st. 50.

Ancestral voices prophesying war.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Kubla Khan.

We know in part, and we prophesy in part.
New Testament: I Corinthians, xiii, 9.

Translated from Boileau's translation,
And quote quotation on quotation.
SWIFT, On Poetry.

¹
I quote others only in order the better to express myself.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. i, ch. 25.

²
I have made here merely a nosegay of other people's flowers, and have provided nothing of my own except the thread which holds them together. (J'ay seylement faict icy un arnas des fleurs estrangieres, n'y ayant fourni du mien que le filet à les lier.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. iii, ch. 12.

I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff.

SIR HENRY WOTTON, Elements of Architecture:
Preface.

A book which hath been culled from the flowers of all books.

GEORGE ELIOT, The Spanish Gypsy. Bk. ii.

³
He ranged his tropes, and preached up patience,

Backed his opinion with quotations.

PRIOR, Paulo Purganti and His Wife, l. 143.

⁴
Always verify your quotations.

DR. MARTIN JOSEPH ROUTH, President of Magdalen College, Advice, given to Dean
John William Burgon, then fellow of Oriel
College. (BURGON, Memoir of Dr. Routh.)
The word "quotations" was changed to "references" in later editions of the book, and is usually so quoted.

⁵
A fine quotation is a diamond on the finger of a man of wit, and a pebble in the hand of a fool.

JOSEPH ROUX, Meditations of a Parish Priest.
Pt. i, sec. 74.

⁶
Some for renown, on scraps of learning dote,
And think they grow immortal as they quote.
To patch-work learn'd quotations are allied:
Both strive to make our poverty our pride.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Satire i, l. 89.

Proud of his learning (just enough to quote).

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xiii, st. 91.

With just enough of learning to misquote.

BYRON, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, l.
66.

RAILROAD

⁷
The progress of invention is really a threat.
Whenever I see a railroad I look for a republic.

EMERSON, Journals, 1866.

⁸
These railroads—could but the whistle be made musical, and the rumble and the jar got rid of—are positively the greatest blessing that the ages have wrought out for us. They give us wings; they annihilate the toil and dust of pilgrimage; they spiritualize travel!

HAWTHORNE, House of Seven Gables. Ch. 17.

⁹
Your railroad, when you come to understand it, is only a device for making the world smaller.

RUSKIN, Modern Painters. Pt. iv, ch. 17, sec. 35.

Going by railroad I do not consider as travelling at all; it is merely being "sent" to a place, and very little different from becoming a parcel.

JOHN RUSKIN, Modern Painters. Bk. iii, pt. 4, ch. 17, sec. 24.

¹⁰
If railroads are not built, how shall we get to heaven in season? But if we stay at home and mind our business, who will want railroads?
We do not ride on the railroad; it rides upon us.
H. D. THOREAU, Walden. Ch. 2.

¹¹
Commuter—one who spends his life
In riding to and from his wife;
A man who shaves and takes a train,
And then rides back to shave again.
E. B. WHITE, The Commuter.

RAIN

I—Rain: Apothegms

¹²
After the rain cometh the fair weather.
ÆSOP, Fables. Bk. ii, fab. 8. (Caxton, tr. 1484)

After the showers at length would come a sun.
CHRISTOPHER MIDDLETON, Famous Historie of Chenon, 26. (1597)

¹³
A foot deep of rain Will kill hay and grain,
But three feet of snow Will make them come mo'.

BLACKMORE, Lorna Doone. Ch. 50. Quoted as an old saying.

¹⁴
It shall rain dogs and polecats.
RICHARD BROME, City Wit. Act iv, sc. 1. (1653)

He was sure it would rain cats and dogs.
SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. ii.

It cannot rain but it pours.

SWIFT, Prose Miscellanies: Title.

It never rains but it pours.

THOMAS GRAY, Letter to Dr. Wharton, 2 Feb., 1771; MALKIN, tr., Gil Blas, i, 9 (1809);
CHARLES KINGSLEY, Veast. Ch. 6 (1848).

1 Though it rain daggers with their points downward.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. iii, sec. ii, mem. 3.

2 When the heaven is shut up, and there is no rain.

Old Testament: II Chronicles, vi, 26.

3 A sunshiny shower Won't last half an hour.

MICHAEL DENHAM, Proverbs, 8.

When God wills, no wind but brings rain.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum No. 328.

The proverb appears in many languages.

The hollow winds begin to blow,
The clouds look black, the glass is low.

EDWARD JENNER, Signs of Rain.

4 Extraordinary rains pretty generally fall after great battles.

PLUTARCH, Lives: Caius Marius.

5 When it rains, it rains on all alike.

W. G. BENJAM, Proverbs, p. 870. Hindoo.

He sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

New Testament: Matthew, v, 45.

6 For the rain it raineth every day.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act v, sc. 1, l. 401; King Lear. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 77.

7 A coming shower your shooting corns presage.

SWIFT, Description of a City Shower.

8 The useful trouble of the rain.

TENNISON, Geraint and Enid, l. 770.

9 Jove, the rain-giver. (Jupiter pluvius.)

TRIBULLUS, Elegies. Bk. i, eleg. 7, l. 26.

He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass.

Old Testament: Psalms, lxxii, 6.

10 Close the stream now, lads: the meadows have drunk enough! (Claudite jam rivos, pueri; sat prata biberunt.)

VERON, Eclogues. No. iii, l. 111.

11 St. Swithin's day, if thou dost rain,

For forty days it will remain.

UNKNOWN, old adage concerning St. Swithin's day, July 15. The French have a similar rhyme about St. Médard's day, June 8.

Now if on Swithin's feast the welkin lours,
And every penthouse streams with hasty showers,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain
And wash the pavements with incessant rain.

JOHN GAY, Trivia. Bk. i, l. 182.

O here, "St. Swithin's, the 15 day, variable weather, for the most part rain," good! "for the most part rain." Why, it should rain forty days after, now, more or less."

BEN JONSON, Every Man Out of His Humour. Act i, sc. 1.

St. Swithin is christening the apples.
HOME, Every Day Book. Vol. i, p. 960.

II—Rain: Description

12 We knew it would rain, for the poplars showed

The white of their leaves, the amber grain
Shrunk in the wind,—and the lightning now
Is tangled in tremulous skeins of rain.

T. B. ALDRICH, Before the Rain.

13 A little rain will fill
The lily's cup which hardly moistens the field.
EDWIN ARNOLD, Light of Asia. Bk. vi, l. 215.

14 The August cloud . . . suddenly
Melts into streams of rain.

BRYANT, Sella, l. 433.

15 Soon dries the rain-drop on the April leaf!
BULWER-LYTTON, New Timon. Pt. iii, sec. 3.

16 The raindrops' showery dance and rhythmic beat,
With tinkling of innumerable feet.

ABRAHAM COLES, The Microcosm Hearing.

17 The thirsty earth soaks up the rain,
And drinks, and gapes for drink again;
The plants suck in the earth, and are
With constant drinking fresh and fair.

ANACREON, Odes. No. 21. (Cowley, tr.)

18 Welcome falls the imprisoning rain—dear hermitage of nature.

EMERSON, Nature, Addresses and Lectures: Literary Ethics.

19 Fall on me like a silent dew,
Or like those maiden showers,
Which, by the peep of day, do strew
A baptism o'er the flowers.

ROBERT HERRICK, To Music, to Becalme His Fever.

Like morning dew that in a pleasant shower
Drops pearls into the bosom of a flower.

THOMAS RANDOLPH, The Jealous Lovers.

20 How it pours, pours, pours,
In a never-ending sheet!

How it drives beneath the doors!

How it soaks the passer's feet!

How it rattles on the shutter!

How it rumples up the lawn!

How 'twill sigh, and moan, and mutter,
From darkness until dawn.

ROSSITER JOHNSON, Rhyme of the Rain.

21 And a thousand recollections
Weave their air-threads into woof,
As I listen to the patter
Of the rain upon the roof.

COATES KINNEY, Rain on the Roof.

¹ The day is cold, and dark, and dreary;
It rains, and the wind is never weary;
The vine still clings to the mouldering wall,
But at every gust the dead leaves fall,
And the day is dark and dreary.
LONGFELLOW, The Rainy Day.

² The ceaseless rain is falling fast,
And yonder gilded vane,
Immovable for three days past,
Points to the misty main.
LONGFELLOW, Travels by the Fireside. St. 1.

³ The gentleness of rain was in the wind.
SHELLEY, Fragment: Rain-Wind.

The good-will of the rain that loves all leaves.
MARKHAM, Lincoln, The Man of the People.

RAINBOW

⁴ And, lo! in the dark east, expanded high,
The rainbow brightens to the setting Sun!
JAMES BEATTIE, The Minstrel. Bk. 1, st. 30.

⁵ 'Tis sweet to view on high
The rainbow, based on ocean, span the sky.
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto 1, st. 122.

⁶ Triumphant arch, that fill'st the sky
When storms prepare to part,
I ask not proud Philosophy
To teach me what thou art.
THOMAS CAMPBELL, To the Rainbow. St. 1.

Still seem, as to my childhood's sight,
A midway station given
For happy spirits to alight
Betwixt the earth and heaven.
THOMAS CAMPBELL, To the Rainbow. St. 2.

The rainbow never tells me
That gust and storm are by;
Yet she is more convincing
Than philosophy.
EMILY DICKINSON, Further Poems. No. 48.

Some day Jane shall have, she hopes,
Rainbows for her skipping ropes.
DOROTHY ALDIS, Skipping Ropes.

⁷ The sun athwart the cloud thought it no sin
To use my land to put his rainbows in.
EMERSON, Nature.

⁸ Over her hung a canopy of state,
Not of rich tissue, nor of spangled gold,
But of a substance, though not animate,
Yet of a heavenly and spiritual mould,
That only eyes of spirits might behold.
GILES FELTCHER, The Rainbow, l. 33.

⁹ I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth.

Old Testament: Genesis, ix, 13.

God's glowing covenant.

HORRA BALLOU, M.S. Sermons.

Bright pledge of peace and sunshine! the sure tie
Of thy Lord's hand, the object of His eye!
When I behold thee, though my light be dim,
Distinct, and low, I can in thine see Him
Who looks upon thee from His glorious throne,
And minds the covenant between all and One.
HENRY VAUGHAN, The Rainbow.

¹⁰ God loves an idle rainbow
No less than labouring seas.
RALPH HODGSON, Poems, p. 59.

¹¹ What skilful limner e'er would choose
To paint the rainbow's varying hues,
Unless to mortal it were given
To dip his brush in dyes of heaven?
SCOTT, Marmion. Canto vi, st. 5.

¹² Mild arch of promise! on the evening sky
Thou shinest fair with many a lovely ray,
Each in the other melting.

SOUTHEY, The Evening Rainbow.

¹³ Whatso looks lovelily
Is but the rainbow on life's weeping rain.
FRANCIS THOMPSON, Ode on the Setting Sun, l. 192.

¹⁴ Hung on the shower that fronts the golden West,
The rainbow bursts like magic on mine
eyes!

In hues of ancient promise there imprest;
Frail in its date, eternal in its guise.
CHARLES TENNYSON TURNER, The Rainbow.

¹⁵ My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky.
WORDSWORTH, My Heart Leaps Up.

Rain, rain, and sun! a rainbow in the sky!
TENNYSON, The Coming of Ariadne, l. 401.

¹⁶ The rainbow comes and goes,
And lovely is the rose.
WORDSWORTH, Intimations of Immortality. Pt. II.

¹⁷ Where the rainbow rests is a crock of gold.
UNKNOWN. (See Notes and Queries. Ser. 1, vol. 2, p. 512.)

¹⁸ The rainbow in the morning
Is the shepherd's warning
To carry his coat on his back.
The rainbow at night
Is the shepherd's delight,
For then no coat will be lack.
UNKNOWN. (HOWARD, Weather Lore, p. 112.)

A rainbow in the morning
Is the Shepherd's warning;
But a rainbow at night
Is the Shepherd's delight.

UNKNOWN. (HOWE, Every Day Book, 4, 670.)

If in the morning the rainbow appear, it signifies moisture; if in the evening it spend itself, fair weather ensueth.

LEONARD DIOGES, Prognostication. (1555)

RAKE

¹ He was a rake among scholars and a scholar among rakes.

MACAULAY, Essays: Aiken's Life of Addison.

² Women who like, and will have for a hero, a rake! how soon are you not to learn that you have taken bankrupts to your bosoms, and that the putrescent gold that attracted you is the slime of the Lake of Sin!

GEORGE MEREDITH, Richard Feverel, Ch. 15.

³ Every woman is at heart a rake.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epist. ii, l. 216. See 1255:3
Few men can be men of pleasure, every man may be a rake.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 25 Jan., 1750.

RAT

⁵ It is the wisdom of rats, that will be sure to leave a house somewhat before it fall.

BACON, Essays: Of Wisdom for a Man's Self. It is a great house still, . . . but it is a ruin none the less, and the rats fly from it.

DICKENS, Dombey and Son, Ch. 59.

A rotten carcass of a boat, . . . the very rats instinctively have quit it.

SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest. Act i, sc. 2, l. 5.

⁶ Anything like the sound of a rat
Makes my heart go pit-a-pat!

ROBERT BROWNING, The Pied Piper.

⁷ Yf they smell a ratt,

JOHN SKELTON, The Image of Hypocrisy. (c. 1520) Works, I, 51. (1843)

I smell a rat.

THOMAS MIDDLETON, Blurt, Master-Constable. Act iv, sc. 1. (1602)

Now you talk of a cat, Cicely, I smell a rat.

THOMAS HEYWOOD, A Woman Killed with Kindness. Act iv, sc. 4. (1603)

Do you not smell a rat?

BEN JONSON, A Tale of a Tub. Act iv, sc. 3. (1633)

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat;

Ralpho, thou dost previncicate.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto i, l. 821. (1663) Frequently thereafter.

⁸ The rat is the concisest tenant.

He pays no rent,— . . .

Hate cannot harm

A foe so reticent.

EMILY DICKINSON, Poems. Pt. ii, No. 35.

⁹ Too late repents the rat when caught by the cat.

JOHN FLOWIO, Second Fruits, 163.

¹⁰ Die here in a rage, like a poisoned rat in a hole.

RAVEN

¹¹ The raven said to the rook, "Stand away, black coat!"

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4729.

Thou art a bitter bird, said the raven to the starling.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 195.

¹² He pardons ravens but storms at doves.
(Dat veniam corvis, vexat censura columbas.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. ii, l. 63.

Who will not change a raven for a dove?

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 114.

¹³ Rarer even than a white raven. (Corvo quoque rarior albo.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vii, l. 202.

¹⁴ Beware of the Raven at Zurich,

'Tis a bird of omen ill;

A noisy and an unclean bird,

With a very, very long bill.

H. W. LONGFELLOW, Journal, 11 Aug., 1836.

The entry is as follows: "Prepared to leave Zurich. At the Hotel du Corbeau they brought us a most exorbitant bill, whereupon I made the following beautiful lines."

The quatrain is repeated, with minor variations, in Hyperion. Bk. iii, ch. 3.

¹⁵ He [Grenville] was the raven of the House of Commons, always croaking defeat in the midst of triumphs.

MACAULAY, Essays: The Earl of Chatham.

¹⁶ The Raven's house is built with reeds,—

Sing woe, and alas is me!

And the Raven's couch is spread with weeds,

High on the hollow tree;

And the Raven himself, telling his beads

In penance for his past misdeeds,

Upon the top I see.

THOMAS D'ARCY MCGEE, The Penitent Raven.

¹⁷ The raven once in snowy plumes was drest,
White as the whitest dove's unauled breast,
Fair as the guardian of the Capitol,
Soft as the swan; a large and lovely fowl,
His tongue, his prating tongue has changed him quite

To sooty blackness from the purest white.
OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. ii, l. 369. (Addison, tr.)

1
It wasn't for nothing—that raven croaking on my left hand just now. (Non temere est quod corvos cantat nunc ab læva manu.)

PLAUTUS, Aulularia, l. 624. (Act iv, sc. 3.)

That raven on yon left-hand oak (Curse on his ill-betiding croak)
Bodes me no good.

JOHN GAY, Fables: The Farmer's Wife and the Raven, l. 27. See also SUPERSTITION: OMENS.

2
Ghastly, grim, and ancient Raven, wandering from the nightly shore,— Tell me what thy lordly name is on the night's Plutonian shore?

Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore!"

EDGAR ALLAN POE, The Raven. St. 8.

Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door!

Quoth the Raven, "Nevermore!"

EDGAR ALLAN POE, The Raven. St. 17.

And the Raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting

On the pallid bust of Pallas just above my chamber door;

And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon's that is dreaming,

And the lamp-light o'er him streaming throws his shadow on the floor;

And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor,

Shall be lifted—nevermore!

EDGAR ALLAN POE, The Raven. St. 18.

Raven from the dim dominions

On the Night's Plutonian shore,

Oft I hear thy dusky pinions

Wave and flutter round my door—

See the shadow of thy pinions

Float along the moonlit floor.

SARAH HELEN POWER WHITMAN, The Raven.

3
Bring up a raven and it will peck out your eyes.

W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, 745. Spanish.

4
The croaking raven doth bellow for revenge.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 264.

5
O, it comes o'er my memory,
As doth the raven o'er the infected house,
Boding to all.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iv, sc. 1, l. 20.

6
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?

SHAKESPEARE, Titus Andronicus. Act iii, sc. 1,
l. 158.

1—Reading: How to Read

7
Read not to contradict and confute; nor to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse; but to weigh and consider.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts, others to be read, but not curiously, and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Studies.

Some books are only cursorily to be tasted of.

FULLER, Holy and Profane State: Of Books.

8
All rests with those who read. A work or thought

Is what each makes it to himself.

P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Proem, l. 326.

9
Reading is not a duty, and has consequently no business to be made disagreeable.

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, *Obiter Dicta: Second
Series: The Office of Literature*.

Books soon are painful to my failing sight,
And oftener read from duty than delight.

GEORGE CRABBE, Tales: Widow's Tale, l. 127.

10
Read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest.

Book of Common Prayer: Collect for the Second Sunday in Advent.

11
It is impossible to read properly without using all one's engine-power. If we are not tired after reading, common-sense is not in us.

ARNOLD BENNETT, *Things that Have Interested
Me: Translating Literature into Life*.

12
We get no good
By being ungenerous, even to a book,
And calculating profits,—so much help
By so much reading. It is rather when
We gloriously forget ourselves and plunge Soul-forward, headlong, into a book's profound,
Impassioned for its beauty and salt of truth—

'Tis then we get the right good from a book.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. i, l. 702.

13
If that thou wilt not read, let it alone;
Some love the meat, some love to pick the bone.

JOHN BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress: The Author's Apology for His Book.

14
What we should read is not the words, but the man whom we feel to be behind the words.

SAMUEL BUTLER THE YOUNGER, Nota-Books,
p. 94.

15
We have not read an author till we have seen his object, whatever it may be, as he saw it.

CARLYLE, Essays: Goethe's Helena.

Reading is seeing by proxy.

HERBERT SPENCER, Study of Sociology. Ch. 15.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 36.

² There is a great deal of difference between the eager man who wants to read a book, and the tired man who wants a book to read.

G. K. CHESTERTON, Charles Dickens, p. 90.

³ It is poor traveling that is only to arrive, and it is poor reading that is only to find out how the book ends.

ARTHUR COLTON, The Reader, Feb., 1909.

⁴ Some read to think,—these are rare; some to write,—these are common; and some to talk,—and these form the great majority.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon.

⁵ In its leaves that day We read no more. (Quel giorno più non vi leggemmo avante.)

DANTE, Inferno. Canto v, l. 138. (Cary, tr.)

When the last reader reads no more.

O. W. HOLMES, The Last Reader.

⁶ There is an art of reading, as well as an art of thinking, and an art of writing.

ISAAC D'ISRAELI, Literary Character. Ch. 11.

The art of reading is to skip judiciously.

P. G. HAMERTON, Intellectual Life. Pt. iv, let. 4.

⁷ One must be a great inventor to read well.

EMERSON, Nature, Addresses, and Lectures: The American Scholar.

'Tis the good reader that makes the good book. EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Success.

If I do not read, nobody will.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. iii, p. 460.

We read often with as much talent as we write.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. x, p. 67.

⁸ All good and true book-lovers practise the pleasing and improving avocation of reading in bed.

EUGENE FIELD, Love Affairs of a Bibliomaniac, p. 31.

⁹ The use of books for pleasure is the most satisfactory recreation; without having acquired the power of reading for pleasure, none of us can be independent.

VISCOUNT GREY, Falldon Papers: Recreation.

¹⁰ A man ought to read just as inclination leads him; for what he reads as a task will do him little good.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life, 1763.)

¹¹ What is twice read is commonly better remembered than what is transcribed.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Idler. No. 74.

¹² There be some men are born only to suck out the poison of books.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life.)

¹³ It may be well to wait a century for a reader, as God has waited six thousand years for an observer.

JOHN KEPLER. (BREWSTER, Martyrs of Science, p. 197.)

If the Almighty God waited six thousand years for one to see what he had made, I may surely wait two hundred for one to understand what I have written.

CARLYLE, Miscellanies: Voltaire. Of Kepler.

¹⁴ As you read it out it begins to grow your own. (Dum recitas, incipit esse tuus.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. i, epig. 39.

¹⁵ And better had they ne'er been born Who read to doubt, or read to scorn.

SCOTT, The Monastery. Ch. 12.

Waverley drove through the sea of books, like a vessel without a pilot or a rudder.

SCOTT, Waverley. Ch. 3.

¹⁶ Of all the artificial relations formed between mankind, the most capricious and variable is that of author and reader.

LORD SHAFTESBURY, Characteristics, iii, 227.

¹⁷ Sometimes I read a book with pleasure, and detest the author.

SWIFT, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

¹⁸ If thou wilt receive profit, read with humility, simplicity and faith; and seek not at any time the fame of being learned.

THOMAS À KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi. Pt. i, ch. 5.

¹⁹ To read well, that is, to read true books in a true spirit, is a noble exercise.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden: Reading.

Books must be read as deliberately and reservedly as they were written.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden: Reading.

The works of the great poets have never yet been read by mankind, for only great poets can read them. . . . Most men have learned to read to serve a paltry convenience, . . . but of reading as a noble intellectual exercise they know little or nothing.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden: Reading.

²⁰ Learn to read slow: all other graces

Will follow in their proper places.

WILLIAM WALKER, The Art of Reading.

II—Reading: What to Read

²¹ It is not wide reading but useful reading that tends to excellence.

ARISTIPPUS. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Aristippus. Bk. ii, sec. 71.)

²² Preserve proportion in your reading. Keep your view of men and things extensive.

THOMAS ARNOLD, Address to His Scholars.

1 In science, read by preference the newest works; in literature, the oldest. The classics are always modern.

BULWER-LYTTON, Caxtonians: Hints on Mental Culture.

For what are the classics but the noblest recorded thoughts of man? They are the only oracles which are not decayed.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden: Reading.

2 Let blockheads read what blockheads wrote.
LORD CHRISTCHURCH, Letters, 1 Nov., 1790.

3 The mind, relaxing into needful sport,
Should turn to writers of an abler sort,
Whose wit well manag'd, and whose classic style,
Give truth a lustre, and make wisdom smile.
COWPER, Retirement, l. 715.

4 The three practical rules, then, which I have to offer, are,—1. Never read any book that is not a year old. 2. Never read any but famed books. 3. Never read any but what you like.
EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Books.

I wish only to read that book it would have been a disaster to omit.

EMERSON, Uncollected Lectures: Books; Journals, ix, 429.

Every book is worth reading which sets the reader in a working mood.

EMERSON, Uncollected Lectures: Resources.

5 Turn over with nightly and daily labor.
(Nocturna versate manu, versate diurna.)

HORACE, Art Poetica, l. 269. Of reading the Greek authors.

6 One should not read to swallow all, but rather see what one has use for.

HENRIK IBSEN, Peer Gynt. Act iv.

7 Was there ever anything written by mere man that was wished longer by its readers, excepting Don Quixote, Robinson Crusoe, and the Pilgrim's Progress?

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Remarks. (FROZZ, Johnsoniana.)

8 Read this of which life can say: "Tis my own." (Hoc lege, quod possit dicere vita "Meum est.")

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. x, epig. 4, l. 8.

9 Read much, but not many books. (Multum legendum esse, non multa.)

PLINY THE YOUNGER, Epistles. Bk. vii, epist. 9; BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1738.

From one that reads but one book . . . the Lord deliver us.

HOWELL, Proverbs: Ital.-Eng., 7. (1699)

10 No man can read with profit that which he cannot learn to read with pleasure.

NOAH PORTER, Books and Reading. Ch. 1.

11 Life being short and the quiet hours of it few, we ought to waste none of them in reading valueless books.

JOHN RUSKIN, Sesams and Lilies: Preface.

Life is too short for reading inferior books.

JAMES BRYCE, Address, Rutgers College, 10 Nov., 1911.

If time is precious, no book that will not improve by repeated readings deserves to be read at all.

CARLYLE, Essays: Goethe's Helena.

12 You must linger among a limited number of master-thinkers, and digest their works, if you would derive ideas which shall win firm hold in your mind.

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. ii, sec. 2.

It is not the reading of many books which is necessary to make a man wise or good, but the well-reading of a few, could he be sure to have the best.

RICHARD BAXTER, Christian Directory. Pt. II, ch. 16.

A few books thoroughly digested, rather than hundreds but gargled in the mouth.

FRANCIS OSBORNE, Advice to a Son.

13 You complain that in your part of the world there is a scant supply of books. But it is quality, rather than quantity, that matters; a limited list of reading benefits; a varied assortment serves only for delight.

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. xiv, sec. 1.

14 Digressions, incontestably, are the sunshine;—they are the life, the soul of reading!

STERNE, Tristram Shandy. Bk. 1, ch. 22.

15 Nothing is worth reading that does not require an alert mind.

CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER, Backlog Studies. No. 1.

III—Reading: Its Benefits

16 Reading is to the mind, what exercise is to the body. As by the one, health is preserved, strengthened, and invigorated; by the other, virtue, which is the health of the mind, is kept alive, cherished, and confirmed.

ANDERSON, The Tailor. No. 147.

17 Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Studies.

Reading makes a full man—meditation a profound man—discourse a clear man.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1738.

¹ Histories make men wise; poets, witty; the mathematics, subtle; natural philosophy, deep; morals, grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Studies.

Books have always a secret influence on the understanding; we cannot at pleasure obliterate ideas: he that reads books of science, though without any fixed desire of improvement, will grow more knowing; he that entertains himself with moral or religious treatises, will imperceptibly advance in goodness; the ideas which are often offered to the mind, will at last find a lucky moment when it is disposed to receive them.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Adventurer. No. 137.

² Of all the human relaxations which are free from guilt, none so dignified as reading.

EDMUND BAYDOR, The Ruminator. No. 24.

³ Who is he . . . that will not be much lightened in his mind by reading of some enticing story, true or feigned?

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy: Democritus to the Reader.

⁴ Let us assume that entertainment is the sole end of reading; even so, I think you would hold that no mental employment is so broadening to the sympathies or so enlightening to the understanding. Other pursuits belong not to all times, all ages, all conditions; but this gives stimulus to our youth and diversion to our old age; this adds a charm to success, and offers a haven of consolation to failure. Through the night-watches, on all our journeyings, and in our hours of ease, it is our un-failing companion.

CICERO, Pro Archia Poeta. Ch. vii, sec. 16.

⁵ Ah! happy he who thus, in magic themes
O'er worlds bewitch'd, in early rapture dreams,
Where wild Enchantment waves her potent
wand,
And Fancy's beauties fill her fairy land.

GEORGE CRABBE, The Library, l. 563.

⁶ The delight of opening a new pursuit, or a new course of reading, imparts the vivacity and novelty of youth even to old age.

ISAAC D'ISRAËLI, Literary Character of Men of Genius. Ch. 22.

⁷ Our high respect for a well-read man is praise enough of literature.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Quotation and Originality.

If we encountered a man of rare intellect, we should ask him what books he read.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Quotation and Originality.

It is a tie between men to have read the same book.

EMERSON, Journals, 1864.

⁸ My early and invincible love of reading, . . . I would not exchange for the treasures of India.

EDWARD GIBSON, Memoirs.

⁹ He that loves reading, has everything within his reach. He has but to desire, and he may possess himself of every species of wisdom to judge and power to perform.

WILLIAM GODWIN, Enquirer: Early Taste for Reading.

¹⁰ In a polite age, almost every person becomes a reader, and receives more instruction from the Press than the Pulpit.

GOLDSMITH, Citizen of the World. Letter 75.

The first time I read an excellent book, it is to me just as if I had gained a new friend: when I read over a book I have perused before, it resembles the meeting with an old one.

GOLDSMITH, Citizen of the World. Letter 83.

¹¹ Every reader who holds a book in his hand is free of the inmost minds of men past and present; . . . he needs no introduction to the greatest.

FREDERIC HARRISON, The Choice of Books, p. 7.

¹² Read anything five hours a day, and you will soon be learned.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life.)

¹³ I love to lose myself in other men's minds. When I am not walking, I am reading; I cannot sit and think. Books think for me.

CHARLES LAMB, Last Essays of Elia: Detached Thoughts on Books and Reading.

¹⁴ Have you ever rightly considered what the mere ability to read means? That it is the key which admits us to the whole world of thought and fancy and imagination? to the company of saint and sage, of the wisest and the wittiest at their wisest and wittiest moment? That it enables us to see with the keenest eyes, hear with the finest ears, and listen to the sweetest voices of all time?

2
His classical reading is great: he can quote
Horace, Juvenal, Ovid and Martial by rote.
He has read Metaphysics, . . . Spinoza and Kant

And Theology too: I have heard him descant
Upon Basil and Jerome. Antiquities, art,
He is fond of. He knows the old masters by heart.

OWEN MEREDITH, Lucile. Canto ii, pt. 4.

they themselves never enter into the church.

THOMAS NORTH, Dial of Princes, 138 (1557)

5
More true knowledge comes by meditation than by reading; for much reading is an oppression of the mind, and extinguishes the natural candle, which is the reason of so many senseless scholars in the world.

WILLIAM PENN, Advice to His Children

6
The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,

MEXANDER, Adelphoi. Frag. 11.

Say first, of God above or Man below
What can we reason but from what we know?

POPE, Essay on Man. Ep. i, l. 17.

The soul of man is divided into three parts, intelligence, reason, and passion. Intelligence and passion are possessed by other animals, but reason by man alone. . . . Reason is immortal, all else is mortal.

PYTHAGORAS, (DIOCENES LACERTIUS, Pythagoras. Bk. viii, sec. 30.)

Reason is nothing else but a portion of the divine spirit set in a human body. (Ratio autem nihil aliud est quam in corpus humanum pars divini spiritus mersa.)

MATTHEW ARNOLD, St. Paul and Protestantism: Preface. A phrase used by Arnold many times.

It is not necessary to believe things in order to reason about them. (Il n'est pas nécessaire de tenir les choses pour en raisonner.)

BAUMARCHAIS, Le Barbier de Séville. Act v, sc. 4.

He who will not reason, is a bigot; he who cannot is a fool; and he who dares not, is a slave.

SIR WILLIAM DRUMMOND, Academical Question: Preface.

Let us first of all follow reason, it is the surest guide. It warns us itself of its feebleness and informs us of its own limitations.

AMAZOLE FRANCES, Credo of a Sceptic, p. 79.

O Reason! when will thy long minority expire?

SOLOON. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Solon. Bk. i, sec. 60.)

⁶ The man who listens to Reason is lost: Reason enslaves all whose minds are not strong enough to master her.

BERNARD SHAW, Maxims for Revolutionists.

The reasonable man adapts himself to the world: the unreasonable one persists in trying to adapt the world to himself. Therefore all progress depends on the unreasonable man.

BERNARD SHAW, Maxims for Revolutionists.

⁷ Impassion'd logic, which outran
The hearer in its fiery course.

TENNYSON, In Memoriam. Pt. cix, st. 2.

⁸ In human affairs there is always, somehow, a slight majority on the side of reason.

HENRY VAN DYKE, attr. But Dr. van Dyke writes, "I don't think this is mine; it sounds more like Emerson."

⁹ I can stand brute force, but brute reason is quite unbearable. There is something unfair about its use. It is hitting below the intellect.

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. ii, ch. 21.

And this I know, for kinde wit me taught,
That reason shall reign and realms govern.

LAROLAND, Plers Plowmen. PASSUS iv, l. 440.

¹² Within the brain's most secret cells
A certain Lord Chief Justice dwells,

Of sovereign power, whom, one and all,
With common voice, we Reason call.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Ghost. Bk. iv, l. 115.

¹³ Reason and speech, which bring men together and unite them in a sort of natural society. Nor in anything are we further removed from the nature of wild beasts. (Ratio et oratio quæ . . . conciliat inter se homines, conjungitque naturali quadam societate; neque ulla re longius absumus a natura ferarum.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 16, sec. 50.

A man without reason is a beast in season.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

A man that doth not use his reason is a tame beast; a man that abuses it is a wild one.

LORD HALTAX, Works, p. 254.

A beast, that wants discourse of reason.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act i, sc. 2, l. 150.

¹⁴ Reason, which is, as it were, the light and lamp of life. (Ratio . . . quasi quædam lux, lumenque vite.)

CICERO, Academicarum Questionum. Bk. i, ch. 5, sec. 8.

We walk evermore
To higher paths by brightening Reason's lamp.

GEORGE ELIOT, The Spanish Gypsy. Bk. ii.

¹⁵ O Youth, alas, why wilt thou not incline
And unto ruled reason bowe thee,
Since Reason is the very straight line
That leadeth folk into felicity?

THOMAS HOCCLEVE, La Male Regle. (1425)

¹⁶ We may take Fancy for a companion, but must follow Reason as our guide.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Letter to Boswell, 1774.

If but a beam of sober Reason play,
Lo, Fancy's fairy frost-work melts away!

ROGERS, Pleasures of Memory. Pt. ii, l. 427.

While Reason drew the plan, the Heart inform'd
The moral page, and Fancy lent it grace.

JAMES THOMSON, Liberty. Pt. iv, l. 262.

¹⁷ Nothing can be lasting when reason does not rule. (Nihil potest esse diuturnum cui non subest ratio.)

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUTUS, De Rebus Gestis Alexandri Magni, iv, 14, 19.

¹⁸ If you wish to subject all things to yourself, subject yourself to reason. (Si vis omnia tibi subicere, te subice rationi.)

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucilius. Epia. 57, sec. 4.

¹⁹ The will of man is by his reason sway'd.
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 115.

²⁰ All the tools with which mankind works upon its fate are dull, but the sharpest among them is the reason.

CARL VAN DOREN, Many Minds, p. 208.

IV—Reason: Its Weakness

1 Between craft and credulity, the voice of reason is stifled.

EDMUND BURKE, Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

2 Reason, which ought always to direct mankind, seldom does; but passions and weaknesses commonly usurp its seat, and rule in its stead.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 15 Feb., 1754.

Address yourself generally to the senses, to the heart, and to the weaknesses of mankind, but very rarely to their reason.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 6 Feb., 1752.

3 Few have reason, most have eyes.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Ghost. Bk. iv, l. 186.

Error lives

Ere reason can be born. Reason, the power To guess at right and wrong, the twinkling lamp

Of wand'ring life, that winks and wakes by turns,

Fooling the follower between shade and shining.

CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride, Act iii, sc. 1.

Dim as the borrow'd beams of moon and stars To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers, Is Reason to the soul: and as on high Those rolling fires discover but the sky, Not light us here; so Reason's glimmering ray Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way, But guide us upward to a better day. And as those nightly tapers disappear, When day's bright lord ascends our hemisphere; So pale grows Reason at Religion's sight; So dies, and so dissolves in supernatural light.

DRYDEN, Religio Laici, l. 1.

Reason, thou vain impertinence,

Deluding hypocrite, begone! . . .

At best thou'rt but a glimmering light,

Which serves not to direct our way;

But, like the moon, confounds our sight,

And only shows it is not day.

If ever there was a bigger lie, my dear Daddy, than any other, it is that man is a reasonable creature.

H. G. WELLS, Mr. Bridding Sees It Through. Bk. ii, ch. 4, sec. 18.

6 Ah, when to the heart of man

Seemed it ever less than a treason

To go with the drift of things,

To yield with a grace to reason

And bow and accept the end

Of a love, or a season?

ROBERT FROST, Reluctance.

7 Reason exercises merely the function of preserving order, is, so to say, the police in the region of art. In life it is mostly a cold arithmetician summing up our follies.

REFORM AND REFORMERS

I—Reform

²
To innovate is not to reform.
EDMUND BURKE, A Letter to a Noble Lord.

³
The oyster-women lock'd their fish up,
And trudged away to cry, No Bishop.
BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. I, canto 2, l. 537.

⁴
All reform except a moral one will prove unavailing.

CARLYLE, Essays: Corn Law Rhymes.

⁵
Every reform, however necessary, will by weak minds be carried to an excess which will itself need reforming.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Biographia Literaria. Ch. 1.

⁶
All zeal for a reform, that gives offence
To peace and charity, is mere pretence.

COWPER, Charity, l. 533.

⁷
Tis such a light as putrefaction breeds
In fly-blown flesh whereon the maggot feeds,
Shines in the dark, but, usher'd into day,
The stench remains, the lustre dies away.

COWPER, Conversation, l. 675. Of bigots and reformers.

⁸
Reforms are less to be dreaded than revolutions, for they cause less reaction.

CHARLES JOHN DARLING, Scintilla Juris.

⁹
Every project in the history of reform, no matter how violent and surprising, is good when it is the dictate of a man's genius and constitution, but very dull and suspicious when adopted from another.

EMERSON, *Essays, Second Series: New Eng-

Every reform is only a mask under cover of which a more terrible reform, which dares not yet name itself, advances

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. vii, p. 205.

The history of persecution is a history of endeavors to cheat nature, to make water run up hill, to twist a rope of sand.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Compensation.

¹¹
Reform is affirmative, conservatism negative; conservatism goes for comfort, reform for truth. . . . Conservatism makes no poetry, breathes no prayer, has no invention; it is all memory. Reform has no gratitude, no prudence, no husbandry.

EMERSON, *Nature, Addresses, and Lectures:

⁴ Suspect, in general, those who remarkably affect any one virtue. . . . I say suspect them, for they are commonly impostors; but do not be sure that they are always so; for I have sometimes known saints really religious, blusters really brave, reformers of manners really honest, and prudes really chaste.

RELIGION

I—Religion: Definitions

The efficacy of religion lies precisely in what is not rational, philosophic, nor eternal; its efficacy lies in the unforeseen, the miraculous, the extraordinary. Thus religion attracts more devotion according as it demands more faith—that is to say, as it becomes more incredible to the profane mind. The philosopher aspires to explain away all mysteries, to dissolve them into light. Mystery on the other hand is demanded and pursued by the religious instinct; mystery constitutes the essence of worship.

AMIEL, Journal, 5 June, 1870.

Methinks there be not impossibilities enough in Religion for an active faith.

Religion—that voice of the deepest human experience.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Culture and Anarchy: Sweetness and Light.

The true religion is built upon the rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time.

BACON, Essays: Of Vicissitude of Things.

RELIGION

A religion that is jealous of the variety of learning, discourse, opinions, and sects, as misdoubting it may shake the foundations, or that cherisheth devotion upon simplicity and ignorance, as ascribing ordinary effects to the immediate working of God, is adverse to knowledge.

FRANCIS BACON, Of the Interpretation of Nature. Ch. 25.

AMBROSE BIERCE, The Devil's Dictionary.

Impiety—your irreverence toward my deity.

AMBROSE BIERCE, The Devil's Dictionary.

The body of all true religion consists, to be sure, in obedience to the will of the Sovereign of the world, in a confidence in His declarations, and in imitation of His perfections.

EDMUND BURKE, Reflections on the Revolution in France.

My altars are the mountains and the ocean,
Earth, air, stars,—all that springs from the great Whole,

Who hath produced and will receive the soul.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto iii, st. 104.

Each cloud-capped mountain is a holy altar;
An organ breathes in every grove;
And the full heart's a Psalter,
Rich in deep hymns of gratitude and love.

THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Rae Wilson, l. 385.

It is well said, in every sense, that a man's religion is the chief fact with regard to him. . . . By religion I do not mean here the church-creed which he professes. . . . This is not what I call religion, . . . but the thing a man does practically believe; the thing a man does practically lay to heart, and know for certain, concerning his vital relations to this mysterious Universe, and his duty and destiny there, . . . that is his religion.

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero-Worship: The Hero as Divinity.

A man's "religion" consists not of the many things he is in doubt of and tries to believe, but of the few he is assured of, and has no need of effort for believing.

CARLYLE, Later-Day Pamphlets. No. 8.

Religion is the sense of ultimate reality, of whatever meaning a man finds in his own existence or the existence of anything else.

G. K. CHESTERTON, Come to Think of It.

THOMAS PAINE, The Age of Reason, Ch. 1.

19 Humanity and Immortality consist neither in reason, nor in love; not in the body, nor in the animation of the heart of it, nor in the thoughts and stirrings of the brain of it;— but in the dedication of them all to Him who will raise them up at the last day.

RUSKIN, Stones of Venice, Vol. I, ch. 2.

20 Religion is not a hearsay, a presumption, a supposition; is not a customary pretension and profession; is not an affectation of any mode; is not a piety of particular fancy, consisting of some pathetic devotions, vehement expressions, bodily severities, affected anomalies, and aversion from the innocent usages of others; but consisteth in a profound humility, and a universal charity.

BENJAMIN WHITCHCOTE, Sermons.

True religion doth clear the mind from all impotent and unsatisfiable desires, which do abuse and toss a man's soul, and make it restless and unquiet. It sets a man free from eager and impetuous loves, from vain and disappointing hopes, from lawless and exorbitant appetites, from frothy and empty joys, from dismal, presaging fears, and anxious, self-devouring cares.

BENJAMIN WHITCHCOTE, Sermons.

Each is not for its own sake,
I say the whole earth and all the stars in the sky are for religion's sake.

I say no man has ever yet been half devout enough,

None has ever yet adored or worship'd half enough,

None has begun to think how divine he himself is, and how certain the future is.

I say that the real and permanent grandeur of these States must be their religion.

WALT WHITMAN, Starting from Poumansk. Sec. 7.

II—Religion: Apothegms

Nothing is so fatal to religion as indifference, which is at least, half infidelity.

EDMUND BURKE, Letter to William Smith. 29 Jan., 1793.

Man is by his constitution a religious animal.

EDMUND BURKE, Reflections on the Revolution in France.

Man has been rather defined as a religious than a rational creature.

JAMES HARRINGTON, Oceana, p. 484. (1656)

Every man, either to his terror or consolation, has some sense of religion.

JAMES HARRINGTON, Oceana, p. 484.

Politics and the pulpit are terms that have little agreement. No sound ought to be heard in the church but the healing voice of Christian charity. . . . Surely the church is a place where one day's truce ought to be allowed to the dissensions and animosities of mankind.

EDMUND BURKE, Reflections on the Revolution in France.

When policy puts on religious cloak.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Doomsday: The Second Hour. St. 22.

When Kings interfere in matters of religion, they enslave instead of protecting it.

FENELON, Advice, to the Pretender, Son of James II of England.

They make it a principle of their religion outwardly to conform to any religion.

BURKE, Speech, on the bill for the relief of Protestant dissenters, House of Commons, 1773.

He left his old religion for an estate, and has not had time to get a new one, but stands like a dead wall between church and synagogue, or like the blank leaves between the Old and New Testament.

SHERIDAN, The Duenna. Act I, sc. 3.

See also POLITICS: EXPEDIENCY.

The writers against religion, whilst they oppose every system, are wisely careful never to set up any of their own.

BURKE, Vindication of Natural Society: Preface.

His religion at best is an anxious wish—like that of Rabelais, a great Perhaps.

Religion does not censure or exclude Unnumber'd pleasures, harmlessly pursu'd.

COWPER, Retirement, l. 783.

We do ourselves wrong, and too meanly estimate the holiness above us, when we deem that any act or enjoyment good in itself, is not good to do religiously.

HAWTHORNE, The Marble Faun. Bk. II, ch. 7.

Religion without joy,—it is no religion.

Religion, credit and the eye are not to be touched.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

⁷ Religion's in the heart, not in the knee.

DOUGLAS JERROLD, The Devil's Ducat.

⁸ To be of no church is dangerous. Religion, of which the rewards are distant, and which is animated only by Faith and Hope, will glide by degrees out of the mind, unless it be invigorated and reimpresed by external ordinances, by stated calls to worship, and the salutary influence of example.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Lives of the Poets: Milton.

⁹ Whoso fighteth for the religion of God, whether he be slain or be victorious, we will give him a great reward.

The Koran, Ch. 4.

¹⁰ All religions die of one disease, that of being found out.

JOHN MORLEY.

¹¹ It is right to be religious, but one should shun religiosity. (Religientem esse oportet; religiosus ne fias.)

NAMMUS FENOLON, Commentariorum Grammaticorum, Bk. xi. Quoted as from an early poet. Aulus Gellius (Noctes Attice, iv, 9,

1) points out that the ending "ous" always implies an excessive amount of the quality in question.

¹² To be furious in religion is to be irreligiously religious.

WILLIAM PENN, Fruits of Solitude.

¹³ The truth of religion is in its ritual and the truth of dogma is in its poetry.

¹⁵ I believe all that I can understand of religion, and I respect the rest without rejecting it. (Je crois de la religion tout ce que j'en puis comprendre, et respecte le reste sans le rejeter.)

ROUSSEAU, Julie, Pt. 5, Letter 3.

Religion has nothing more to fear than not being sufficiently understood.

STANISLAUS, KING OF POLAND, Maxims, No. 36.

¹⁶ In religion, as in friendship, they who profess most are the least sincere.

SHERIDAN, The Duenna, Act iii, sc. 3.

¹⁷ A religious life is a struggle and not a hymn.

MADAME DE STAEL, Corinne, Bk. 2, ch. 5.

¹⁸ The poor creatures . . . seated themselves on the "anxious benches."

FRANCIS M. TROLLOPE, Domestic Manners of the Americans, Ch. 8. (1832)

In front of the pulpit there was a space railed off and strewn with straw, which I was told was the anxious seat, and on which sat those who were touched by their consciences.

FREDERICK MARYAT, Diary in America, 1839.

Folks got up . . . and worked their way . . . to the mourners' bench, with the tears running down their faces.

MARK TWAIN, (Century Magazine, Feb., 1885.)

¹⁹ Religion hath no landmarks.

M. F. TUPPER, Of Estimating Character.

²⁰ I would rather think of my religion as a gamble than to think of it as an insurance premium.

STEPHEN S. WEA, Religion.

²¹ The crooked and obedient spirits draws;

The pointed, those rebels who spurn at Christian laws.

(Curva trahit mites, pars pungit acuta rebelles.)

UNKNOWN, On a Crosier. (BROUGHTON, Dictionary of Religions.) A crosier at Toulouse is said to bear the motto: "Curva trahit, quos virga regit, pars ultima pungit." A crosier is curved at the top and pointed at the bottom.

III—Religion: Its Virtues

1 Religion tends to speak the language of the heart, which is the language of friends, lovers, children, and parents.

E. S. AMES. (NEWTON, My Idea of God, p. 246.)

2 The spiritual virtue of a sacrament is like light: although it passes among the impure, it is not polluted. (Spiritualis enim virtus sacramenti ita est ut lux: etsi per immundos transeat, non inquinatur.)

St. AUGUSTINE, Johannis Evang. Ch. 1, sec. 15.

3 Religion converts despair, which destroys, into resignation, which submits.

COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, Commonplace Book.

4 Religion, if in heav'nly truths attir'd,
Needs only to be seen to be admir'd.

COWPER, Expostulation, l. 492.

5 There is no age which religion does not become. (Nullam etatem non decet religio.)

ERASMUS, Colloquia: Pietas Puerilis.

6 Religion always sides with poverty.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church Militant, l. 252.

7 With sweet kind natures, as in honey'd cells,
Religion lives, and feels herself at home.

THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Rae Wilson, l. 308.

8 The enduring value of religion is in its challenge to aspiration and hope in the mind of man.

ERNEST M. HOPKINS. (DURANT, On the Meaning of Life, p. 75.)

9 The highest flights of charity, devotion, trust, patience, bravery, to which the wings of human nature have spread themselves have been flown for religious ideals.

WILLIAM JAMES, Varieties of Religious Experience, p. 259.

10 Nobody can deny but religion is a comfort to the distressed, a cordial to the sick, and sometimes a restraint on the wicked; therefore, whoever would laugh or argue it out of the world, without giving some equivalent for it, ought to be treated as a common enemy.

MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU, Letter to the Countess of Sude, 1752, referring to Swift.

10 Religion's all. Descending from the skies
To wretched man, the goddess in her left
Holds out this world, and, in her right, the next.
YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night iv, l. 550.

IV—Religion: Its Faults

11 Religion brought forth riches, and the daughter devoured the mother. (Religio peperit divitias et filia devoravit matrem.)

St. BERNARD, Saying. (REUSNER, Enigmatographia. Pt. i, p. 361. 1602.)

12 No priestcraft can longer make man content with misery here in the hope of compensation hereafter.

G. STANLEY HALL, Senescence, p. 483.

13 Formal religion was organized for slaves: it offered them consolation which earth did not provide.

ELBERT HUBBARD, Philistine. Vol. xiv, p. 89.

14 Religion has reduced Spain to a guitar, Italy to a hand-organ, and Ireland to exile.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Gov. Rollin's Fast Day Proclamation.

15 What excellent fools Religion makes of men!
BEN JONSON, Sejanus. Act v.

Fanatic fools, that in those twilight times,
With wild religion cloaked the worst of crimes!
JOHN LANCHESTER, The Country Justice. Pt. iii, l. 122.

16 It is, I think, an error to believe that there is any need of religion to make life seem worth living.

SINCLAIR LEWIS. (DURANT, On the Meaning of Life, p. 37.)

17 Long time men lay oppress'd with slavish fear;
Religion's tyranny did domineer. . . .
At length a mighty one of Greece began
T' assert the natural liberty of man,
By senseless terrors and vain fancies led
To slavery. Straight the conquer'd phantoms fled.

LUCRETIUS, De Rerum Natura. Bk. i, l. 63. (Crech, tr.) The reference is to Epicurus.

Too often in time past religion has brought forth criminal and shameful actions. (Sæpius olim Religio peperit scelerosa atque impia facta.)

MARY BAKER EDDY, Miscellany, p. 170.

⁹ I do not find that the age or country makes the least difference; no, nor the language the actors spoke, nor the religion which they professed, whether Arab in the desert, or Frenchman in the Academy. I see that sensible men and conscientious men all over the world were of one religion,—the religion of well-doing and daring.

BATSON, *Lectures and Biographical Sketches:
The Preacher*.

¹⁰ I confidently expect that in the future even

¹³ We cannot make a religion for others, and we ought not to let others make a religion for us.
Our own religion is what life has taught us.

DEAN W. R. INGE. (MARCHANT, Wis and Wisdom of Dean Inge. No. 1.)

¹⁴ I must ever believe that religion substantially good which produces an honest life, and we have been authorized by one whom you and I equally respect, to judge of the tree by its fruit.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. xiv, p. 197.

I never told my own religion, nor scrutinized that of another. I never attempted to make a convert, nor wished to change another's creed. I have ever judged of others' religion by their lives . . . for it is from our lives and not from our words, that our religion must be read.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. xv, p. 60.

On the whole we must repeat the often repeated saying, that it is unworthy a religious man to view an irreligious one either with alarm or aversion; or with any other feeling than regret, and hope, and brotherly commiseration.

CARLYLE, Essays: Voltaire.

¹⁵ Sir, I think all Christians, whether Papists or Protestants, agree to the essential articles, and that their differences are trivial, and rather political than religious.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life, 1763.)

¹⁶ The Earl of Shaftesbury said at last . . .
"Men of sense are really but of one religion."
Upon which says the lady of a sudden, "Pray, my lord, what religion is that which men of sense agree in?" "Madam," says the Earl,
"men of sense never tell."

ARTHUR OWEN, Speaker of the House of Commons, Footnote to Bishop Gilbert Bur-

net's notice of the Earl of Shaftesbury, History of His Own Times, Vol. I, bk. 1, sec. 96. Froude tells a similar anecdote of Samuel Rogers (Short Studies on Great Subjects: A Plea for the Free Discussion of Theological Difficulties), but this was probably a confusion of memory on Froude's part. The saying has also been attributed to Benjamin Franklin, who probably repeated it upon some occasion.

Old Lord Shaftesbury, conferring with Major Wildman about the many sects of religion, "All wise men are of the same religion." Whereupon a lady in the room . . . demanded what that religion was, To whom Lord Shaftesbury straight replied, "Madam, wise men never tell."

JOHN TOLAND, Clidophorus.

"As for that," said Waldenshare, "sensible men are all of the same religion." "Pray, what is that?" inquired the Prince. "Sensible men never tell."

MRS HUMPHRY WARD, Robert Elsmere. Bk. ii, ch. 16. Referring to the valedictory of Archbishop Sutton, on the consecration of Bishop Reginald Heber to the See of Calcutta

The merit claimed for the Anglican Church is, that if you let it alone, it will let you alone.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. viii, p. 368.

¹⁵ To damn for falling short Of what they could not do, For not believing the report Of that which was not true,

CHARLES WESLEY, Epigram on Calvinism.

We are God's chosen few; All others will be damned; There is no place in Heaven for you, We can't have Heaven crammed.

Credited to JONATHAN SWIFT by F. J. GILMAN, Evolution of the English Hymn, but not found in Swift's works. Directed at the Calvinists. Quoted in Lord Fisher's Memoirs.

You can and you can't,—You shall and you shan't—You will and you won't—You'll be damned if you do—And you'll be damned if you don't

Thy nights are banished from the realms of sleep!—

Yes! they may flatter thee, but thou shalt feel
A hollow agony which will not heal,
For thou art pillowed on a curse too deep.

BYRON, Lines on Hearing Lady Byron Was Ill.

³ Remorse is as the heart in which it grows;
If that be gentle, it drops balmy dews
Of true repentance; but if proud and gloomy,
It is the poison tree, that pierces to the inmost,

Weeps only tears of poison.

REPUTATION

I—Reputation: Definitions

⁵
Where reputation is, almost every thing be-cometh; but where it is not, it must be supplied by punctilios and compliments.

FRANCIS BACON, Advancement of Learning.
Civil Knowledge. Sec. 3.

⁶
To disregard what the world thinks of us is not only arrogant but utterly shameless.
(Negligere quid de se quisque sentiat, non solum arrogantis est, sed etiam omnino dissoluti.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 28, sec. 99.

The contempt of good reputation is called impudence.

THOMAS HOBBES, Leviathan. Pt. i, ch. 6.

⁷
Reputation is the life of the mind, as breath is the life of the body.

GRACIAN, Complete Gentleman, 96. (Salkeld, tr.)

⁸
The invisible thing called a Good Name is made up of the breath of numbers that speak well of you.

LORD HALIFAX, Works, p. 37.

⁹
The great difficulty is first to win a reputation; the next to keep it while you live; and the next to preserve it after you die.

B. R. HATTON, Table Talk.

Reputation is a bubble which a man bursts when he tries to blow it for himself.

EMMA CARLETON, (The Philistine, xi, 82.)

Cassio: Reputation! reputation! reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial . . .

Iago: Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 262.

To be mis-spoken and mis-seen of men,
Which is not for high-seated hearts to fear.

SWINBURNE, Bothwell. Act i, sc. 1.

V—Reputation in Women

Nothing is so delicate as the reputation of a woman; it is at once the most beautiful and most brittle of all human things.

FANNY BURNBY, Evchna. Letter 39.

The reputation of a woman may also be compared to a mirror of crystal, shining and bright, but liable to be sullied by every breath that comes near it.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, bk. iv, ch. 33.

Flavia, most tender of her own good name,
Is rather careless of her sister's fame.

COWPER, Charity, l. 453.

Must I live 'twixt spite and fear,
Every day grow handsomer,
And lose my reputation?

JOHN GAY, The Lady's Lamentation.

For a strolling damsel bears a doubtful reputation (Denn ein wanderndes Mädchen ist immer von schwankendem Rufe.)

GOETHE, Hermann und Dorothea, vii, 93.

Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrimed and black.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 386.

VI—Reputation: Its Loss

Who can see worse days than he that yet living doth follow at the funeral of his own reputation?

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: On Death Sec. 11. (The authenticity of this essay is doubted.)

It is a maxim with me that no man was ever written out of reputation but by himself.

RICHARD BENTLEY, (Monk, Life of Bentley. Vol. i, ch. 6.)

No book was ever written down by any but itself.

3 I have offended reputation,
A most unnoble swerving.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act iii, sc. 11, l. 49.

4 Thy death-bed is no lesser than thy land
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 95.

5 The breath
Of accusation kills an innocent name,
And leaves for lame acquittal the poor life,
Which is a mask without it.

SHELLEY, The Cenci. Act iv, sc. 4, l. 137.

6 Bankrupt in fortune and reputation.

SIFRIDIAN, School for Scandal. Act i, sc. 1.

VII—Reputation: Its Recovery

7 A wounded reputation is seldom cured.

H. G. BOHN, Hand-Book of Proverbs, p. 304.

8 Reputation crack'd is a Venice-glass broke.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4021.

Glass, China, and Reputation, are easily crack'd and never well mended.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1750.

9 A lost good name is ne'er retriev'd.

JOHN GAY, Fables: The Fox at the Point of Death, l. 46.

10 An ill wound is cured, not an ill name.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

11 Who swerves from innocence, who makes divorce

Of that serene companion—a good name,
Recovers not his loss; but walks with shame,
With doubt, with fear, and haply with remorse.

WORDSWORTH, The River Duddon. Sonnet xxx.

16 Seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you

New Testament: Matthew, vii, 7.

He that seeketh findeth.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs, i, 10.

Seek till you find and you'll not lose your labour.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 200.

17 Like following life thro' creatures you dissect,
You lose it in the moment you detect.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. i, l. 29.

18 Far must thy researches go
Wouldst thou learn the world to know;
Thou must tempt the dark abyss
Wouldst thou prove what Being is;
Naught but firmness gains the prize,
Naught but fullness makes us wise,
Buried deep truth ever lies.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. ii, sec. 15, conclusion.

Then let us cheerfu' acquiesce,
Nor make our scanty pleasures less,

By plaining at our state.
BURNS, Epistle to Davie.

Resignation open-eyed, conscious, and informed by love, is the only one of our feelings for which it is impossible to become a sham.

JOSEPH CONRAD, A Personal Record: Preface.

To be resign'd when illis betide,
Patient when favours are denied,
And pleased with favours given;—
Dear Chloe, this is wisdom's part,
This is that incense of the heart
Whose fragrance smells to heaven.

NATHANIEL COTTON, The Fireside. St. 11.

It's over, and can't be helped, and that's one consolation, as they always say in Turkey.

DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 23.

Dare to look up to God and say, "Use me henceforward as Thou wilt; I am of one mind with Thee; I am Thine; I ask exemption from nothing that pleases Thee; lead me where Thou wilt; clothe me in any dress Thou chooseth."

EPICETUS, Discourses. Bk. ii, ch. 16, sec. 42.

What is the law of God? To guard what is his own, not to lay claim to what is not his own, but to make use of what is given him, and not to yearn for what has not been given.

EPICETUS, Discourses. Bk. ii, ch. 16, sec. 28.

RESPECTABILITY

20 How much of priceless life were spent

With men that every virtue decks,

And women models of their sex.

ROBERT BROWNING, Respectability.

21 "The Discobolus is out here because he is vulgar—

He has neither vest nor pants with which to cover his limbs;

I, sir, am a person of the most respectable connections—

My brother-in-law is haberdasher to Mr.
Spurgeon."

O God! O Montreal!

SAMUEL BUTLER, A Psalm of Montreal. Written after visiting the Montreal Museum of Natural History, and finding the Discobolus stuck away in a corner because, as the custodian said, he was rather vulgar.

In the bosom of her respectable family resided

¹⁵ The wrath of the gods may be great, but it assuredly is slow. (Ut sit magna, tamen certe lenta ira deorum est.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. xiii, l. 100.

¹⁶ And will not Jupiter call upon himself, think you? Do you imagine that he has condoned everything because, when it thunders, the sacred fire rends in twain an oak tree rather than you and your house?

PERSIUS, Satires. Sat. ii, l. 23.

All who bring to court false cases supported by false witnesses, all who before the magistrate deny on oath their honest debts, them we note and take their names to Jove. Day by day He knows who they be that do seek evil here on earth. When the wicked here expect to win their suits by perjury, or press false claims before the judge, the case adjudged is adjudged again by Him. And the fine He fines them far exceeds their gains in courts of law.

PLAUTUS, Rudens: Prologue, l. 13.

Ah, wretch! even though one may at first conceal his perjuries, yet retribution creeps on, though late, with noiseless step. (Ah, miser! et si quis primo perjurio colat, Sera tamen tacitus Poena venit pedibus.)

TIBULLUS, Odes. Bk. i, ode 9, l. 3.

The divine wrath is slow indeed in vengeance but it makes up for its tardiness by the severity of the punishment. (Lento quidem gradu ad vindictam divina procedit ira, sed tarditatem supplicii gravitate compensat.)

VALERIUS MAXIMUS, Annals. Bk. i, ch. 1, sec. 3.

And though circuitous and obscure

The feet of Nemesis, how sure!

WILLIAM WATSON, Europe at the Play.

It is advantageous that the gods should be believed to attend to the affairs of man; and the punishment for evil deeds, though sometimes late, is never fruitless.

PLINY THE ELDER, Historia Naturalis. Bk. ii, ch. 5, sec. 10.

A Woman's Vengeance

I—Revenge: Definitions

Revenge is a kind of wild justice; which the more man's nature runs to, the more ought law to weed it out.

BACON, Essays: Of Revenge.

Vengeance is not cured by another vengeance, nor a wrong by another wrong; but each increaseth and aggreggeth the other.

CHAUCER, Melibee, Sec. 31, l. 2475.

The noblest vengeance is to forgive.

H. G. BOHN, Hand-Book of Proverbs, p. 512.

To forget a wrong is the best revenge.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 92.

'Tis more noble to forgive, and more manly to despise, than to revenge an Injury.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1752.

Forgiveness and a smile is the best revenge.

SAMUEL PALMER, Essays on Proverbs, 81.

To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens, Act iii, 5, 39.

Living well is the best revenge.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum, No. 520.

Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head.
New Testament: Romans, xii, 19, 20. The last phrase is quoted from Proverbs, xxv, 22.

Vengeance is a morsel for God. (Vendetta, boccon di Dio.)

UNKNOWN. An Italian proverb. (See TRENCH, Proverbs and Their Lessons, iii, 55.)

Vengeance to God alone belongs;

But, when I think on all my wrongs,

My blood is liquid flame!

SCOTT, Marmion, Canto vi, st. 7.

Call it not

Revenge! thus sanctified and thus sublimed,
'Tis duty, 'tis devotion.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, Roderick, Pt. iii, l. 397.

There are things

Which make revenge a virtue by reflection,
And not an impulse of mere anger.

BYRON, Marino Faliero, Act iv, sc. 2.

Souls made of fire, and children of the sun,
With whom revenge is virtue.

YOUNG, The Revenge, Act v, sc. 2.

II—Revenge: Apothegms

Revenge in person's certainly no virtue,
But then 'tis not my fault if others hurt you.

BYRON, Don Juan, Canto i, st. 30.

He meditates revenge who least complains.

¹³ I am the signet which marks the page where the revolution has been stopped; but when I die it will turn the page and resume its course. (Je suis le signet qui marque la page où la révolution s'est arrêtée; mais quand je serai mort, elle tournera le feuillet et reprendra sa marche.)

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, Remark, to Count Molé.

¹⁴ Revolutions are not made; they come. A revolution is as natural a growth as an oak. It comes out of the past. Its foundations are laid far back.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech, at Boston, to the Anti-Slavery Society, 28 Jan., 1852.

Insurrection of thought always precedes insurrection of arms.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech, 1 Nov., 1859.

¹⁵ Sire, it is not a revolt,—it is a revolution. (Mon sire, ce n'est pas une révolte,—c'est une révolution.)

DUC DE ROCHFOUCAULD-LIANCOURT, to Louis XVI, King of France, on the evening of 14 July, 1789, after the fall of the Bastille. He had hastened to Versailles to apprise the king of the event, and the King had exclaimed, "Mais, c'est une révolte!" (CALLEYLE, French Revolution. Pt. i, bk. 5, ch. 7.)

¹⁶ I know and all the world knows, that revolutions never go backwards.

WILLIAM HENRY Seward, Speech: The Irrepressible Conflict, Oct., 1858.

Revolutions never go backward.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech: Progress, 17 Feb., 1861.

¹⁷ Revolutions have never lightened the burden of tyranny: they have only shifted it to another shoulder.

BERNARD SHAW, Revolutionist's Handbook: Preface.

The effect of every revolt is merely to make the bonds galling.

H. L. MENCKEN, Prejudices. Ser. II, p. 245.

We all think that Mr. Roosevelt is only the Kerehsky of this revolution.

WILLIAM ALBERT WIRT, quoting, so he claimed, an unnamed "brain-truster" before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives, 23 March, 1934.

1 Repression is the seed of revolution.

DANIEL WEBSTER, Speech, 1845.

REWARD

I—Reward: Definitions and Apothegms

2 Let a man contend to the uttermost
For his life's set prize, be it what it will!

ROBERT BROWNING, The Statue and the Bust.

3 'Tis an old lesson; Time approves it true,
And those who know it best, deplore it most;

When all is won that all desire to woo,
The paltry prize is hardly worth the cost.
BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto II, st. 35.

The prize is not without dust. (Palma non sine pulvere.)

UNKNOWN. A Latin proverb.

See also under PALM.

4 The "wages" of every noble work do yet lie in Heaven or else nowhere.

CARLYLE, Past and Present. Bk. III, ch. 12.

For blessings ever wait on virtuous deeds;
And though a late, a sure reward succeeds.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act V. Concluding lines.

5 The reward of one duty is the power to fulfil another.

GEORGE ELIOT, Daniel Deronda. Bk. VI, ch. 46.

7 'Tis toil's reward, that sweetens industry,
As love inspires with strength the enraptur'd thrush.

EDMUNDELL ELLIOT, Corn Law Rhymes. No. 7.

8 The labourer is worthy of his reward.

New Testament: I Timothy, v, 18. See also under LABOR.

9 What is vulgar, and the essence of all vulgarity, but the avarice of reward? 'Tis the difference of artisan and artist, of talent and genius, of sinner and saint. The man whose eyes are nailed, not on the nature of his act, but on the wages, whether it be money, or office,
or fame, is almost equally low.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Worship.

9 Service without reward is punishment.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jocund Prudentium.

10 Those sweet rewards, which decorate the brave,
'Tis folly to decline.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Lines Added to an Ode by Sir William Jones.

11 Give, I pray, a reward worthy of my genius.
(Da, precor, ingenio præmia digna meo.)
OVID, Tristia. Bk. III, eleg. 11, l. 50.

12 The reward of a thing rightly done is to have done it. (Recte facti fecisse merces est.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epis. 81, sec. 20.

The reward of a thing well done is to have done it.

EMERSON, Essays: New England Reformers.
The reward of well-doing is the doing, and the fruit of our duty is our duty.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. II, ch. 16.

The reward for a good deed is to have done it.
ELBERT HUMPHREY, The Philistine, xii, 139.

[He] rewards his deeds with doing them.

13 Who would run, that's moderately wise,
A certain danger for a doubtful prize?

JOHN POMFREY, Love Triumphant, l. 85.

14 Is there no bright reversion in the sky
For those who greatly think, or bravely die?
POPE, Elegy to an Unfortunate Lady, l. 9.

15 Of old those met rewards who could excel,
And such were prais'd who but endeavour'd
well;

Tho' triumphs were to gen'als only due,
Crowns were reserv'd to grace the soldiers too.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. II, l. 310.

Rewards, that either would to Virtue bring
No joy, or be destructive of the thing:
How oft by these at sixty are undone
The virtues of a saint at twenty-one!

POPE, Essay on Man. Epis. IV, l. 181.

16 Desert and reward, I can assure her, seldom keep company.

RICHARDSON, Clarissa Harlowe, IV, 120.

17 In that day's feats, . . .
He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his need

Was brow-bound with the oak.
SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus. Act II, sc. 2, l. 99.

18 I never knew yet but rebuke and check was the reward of valour.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act IV, sc. 3, l. 35.

¹ There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Cæsar. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 30.
Learning to the Studious; Riches to the Careful;
Power to the Bold; Heaven to the Virtuous.
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1754.

² Preferment goes by letter and affection.
SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act i, sc. 1, l. 36.

³ I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness.
SHAKESPEARE, Titus Andronicus. Act i, sc. 1, l. 236.

⁴ Through long-lived pressure of obscure distress,
Still to be strenuous for the bright reward.
WORDSWORTH, Sonnet: To B. R. Haydon.

⁵ A leather medal his reward should be,
A leather medal and an LL.D.
UNKNOWN, Harvardiana, iii, 147.

II—Reward: The Goal, Not the Prize

⁶ Be it jewel or toy,
Not the prize gives the joy,
But the striving to win the prize.
BULWER-LYTTON, The Boatman.

⁷ Perhaps the reward of the spirit who tries
Is not the goal but the exercise.
EDMUND VANCE COOKE, Prayer.

⁸ The virtue lies
In the struggle, not the prize.
R. M. MILNER, The World to the Soul.

⁹ The deed is everything, the glory naught.
(Die That ist alles, nichts der Ruhm.)
GOETHE, Faust. Pt. ii, act iv, sc. 1. (Bayard Taylor, tr.)

¹⁰ Not in rewards, but in the strength to strive,
The blessing lies.

J. T. TROWBRIDGE, Twoscore and Ten.

¹¹ And set his heart upon the goal,
Not on the prize.

¹² You shall never have it,
The free German Rhine.
(Sie sollen ihn nicht haben Den freien, deutschen Rhein.)
BACCHUS, Der Rhein. Alfred de Musset wrote a riposte, Nous l'avons eu, Votre Rhin Alle- mand (We have had it, your German Rhine), which appeared in the Altkölnner, 13 Aug., 1870.

¹³ Majestic Rhine, . . .
A blending of all beauties,—streams and dells,
Fruit, foliage, crag, wood, corn-field, mountain, vine,
And chiefless castles breathing stern farewells.
BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iii, st. 46.

The castled crag of Drachenfels
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters broadly swells
Between the banks which bear the vine;
And hills all rich with blossom'd trees,
And fields which promise corn and wine,
And scatter'd cities crowning these,
Whose far white walls along them shine.
BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iii, st. 55, (1).

¹⁴ The lordly, lovely Rhine.
THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Child and Hind, l. 23.

¹⁵ On the Rhine, on the Rhine, there grow our vines. (Am Rhein, am Rhein, da wachsen uns're Reben.)

MATTHIAS CLAUDIUS, Rheinweinlied.

¹⁶ In Köhln, a town of monks and bones,
And pavements fang'd with murderous stones
And rags and hags, and hideous wenches;
I counted two and seventy stenchers,
All well defined, and several stinks!
Ye Nymphs that reign o'er sewers and sinks,
The river Rhine, it is well known,
Doth wash your city of Cologne;
But tell me, Nymphs, what power divine
Shall henceforth wash the river Rhine?
COLERIDGE, Cologne.

¹⁷ The Rhine! the Rhine! a blessing on the Rhine!
LONGFELLOW, Hyperion. Bk. i, ch. 2.

Beneath me flows the Rhine, and, like the stream of Time, it flows amid the ruins of the Past.

LONGFELLOW, Hyperion. Bk. i, ch. 3.

¹⁸ The Rhine, the Rhine, the German Rhine!
Who guards today my stream divine?
(Zum Rhein, zum Rhein, zum deutschen

I—Riches: Definitions

¹⁹ I cannot call riches better than the baggage of virtue. The Roman word is better, Impedi- menta. For as the baggage is to an army, so is riches to virtue. It cannot be spared, nor left behind, but it hindreth the march; yes, and the care of it, sometimes, loseth or disturbeth the victory.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Riches.

For what are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will?

WILLIAM CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act II, sc. 9.

¹ Surplus wealth is a sacred trust which its possessor is bound to administer in his lifetime for the good of the community.

ANDREW CARNEGIE, The Gospel of Wealth.

² Communism is a hateful thing. . . . But the communism of combined wealth and capital . . . is not less dangerous than the communism of oppressed poverty and toil.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Annual Message, 1888.

³ Wealth is an application of mind to nature; and the art of getting rich consists not in industry, much less in saving, but in a better order, a timeliness, in being at the right spot.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Wealth.

It is the perpetual tendency of wealth to draw on the spiritual class, not in this coarse way, but in plausible and covert ways.

EMERSON, Lectures and Biographical Sketches: The Man of Letters.

⁴ The ideal social state is not that in which each gets an equal amount of wealth, but in which each gets in proportion to his contribution to the general stock.

HENRY GEORGE, Social Problems. Ch. 6.

⁵ It cannot be repeated too often that the safety of great wealth with us lies in obedience to the new version of the Old World axiom—Richesse oblige.

HOLMES, A Mortal Antipathy: Introduction.

⁶ Know from the bounteous heavens all riches flow;
And what man gives, the gods by man bestow.

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xviii, l. 26. (Broome, tr.)

⁷ It is great riches to a man to live sparingly with an even mind. (Divitiæ grandes homini sunt, vivere parce Æquo animo.)

LUCRETIUS, De Rerum Natura. Bk. v, l. 1117.

⁸ Riches, the incentives to evil, are dug out of the earth. (Effodiuntur opes, irritamenta malorum.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. I, l. 140.

⁹ Usefulness is value in the hands of the valiant. Wealth is the possession of the valuable by the valiant.

RUSKIN, Ad Valorem.

¹⁰ The people of this country are not jealous of fortunes, however great, which have been built up by the honest development of great enterprises, which have been actually earned by business energy and sagacity; they are jealous only of speculative wealth, of the wealth which has been piled up by no effort at all, but only by shrewd wits playing on the credulity of others. . . . This is "predatory wealth," and is found in stock markets.

WOODROW WILSON, Address, N. Y., 13 April, 1908.

It is almost as difficult to reconcile the principles of republican society with the existence of billionaires as of dukes.

THOMAS WENTWORTH HOGINSON.

II—Riches: Apothegms

¹¹ No man's fortune can be an end worthy of his being.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. II.

¹² The man who dies rich dies disgraced.

ANDREW CARNEGIE, The Gospel of Wealth.

The amassing of wealth is one of the worst species of idolatry, no idol more debasing.

ANDREW CARNEGIE, Memorandum, made in 1868, and found among his papers after his death.

¹³ Malefactors of great wealth.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, Provincetown, Mass., 20 Aug., 1907.

¹⁴ As rich as Cæsus. (Superare Crassum divitiis.)

¹⁵ An Embarrassment of Riches. (Embarras de Richesse.)

D'ALLAINVAL, Title of comedy, 1726. Often quoted, "Embarras des richesses." Played at the Haymarket, London, in a translation by John Ozell, 9 Oct., 1738.

¹⁶ A rich man is an honest man, no thanks to him, for he would be a double knave to cheat mankind when he had no need of it.

DANIEL DEFOE, Serious Reflections.

¹⁷ Riches are gotten with pain, kept with care, and lost with grief.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4043.

¹⁸ The house laughs with silver. (Ridet argento domus.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. IV, ode 11, l. 6.

¹⁹ Knowledge makes one laugh, but wealth makes one dance.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 950.

²⁰ If every man who wears a laced coat (that he can pay for) was extirpated, who would miss them?

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Miscellanies. Vol. I, p. 253.

²¹ I come to see what riches thou bearest in thy breeches.

14
If the search for riches is sure to be successful, though I should become a groom with whip in hand to get them, I will do so. As the search may not be successful, I will follow after that which I love.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. vii, ch. 11. (EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Social Aims.)

15
There are only three ways by which any individual can get wealth—by work, by gift, or by theft. And, clearly, the reason why the workers get so little is that the beggars and thieves get so much.

HENRY GEORGE, Social Problems, p. 84.

JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs, Ital.-Eng., 12;
FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1736.

⁷ It is better to live rich than to die rich.

SAMUEL JOHNSON (BOSWELL, Life, 1773.)

Life is short. The sooner that a man begins to enjoy his wealth the better.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life, 1773.)

⁸ The shade of the rich man will carry nothing to his abode in the other world. (Nil feret ad manes divitis umbra suos.)

OVID, Tristis. Bk. v, eleg. 14, l. 12.

You are wealthy. And what is the end of it? When you depart, do you trail your riches after you as you are being pulled to your tomb? You gather wealth by spending time, but you cannot pile up a heavier measure of life.

PALLADAS (Greek Anthology. Bk. x, eplg. 60.)

If your riches are yours, why don't you take them with you to t'other world?

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1751.

They'll make no pocket in my shroud.

JOAQUIN MILLER, The Dead Millionaire.

⁹ They who know all the wealth they have, are poor;

He's only rich that cannot tell his store.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING, Against Fruition.

Not he that knows the wealth he has is poor, But he that darts not touch, nor use, his store.

EDMUND WALLER, Answer to Suckling's Verses.

¹⁰ Riches get their value from the mind of their possessor; they are blessings to those who know how to use them, curses to those who do not. (Atque hæc perinde sunt ut illius animus qui ea possidet; Qui uti scit ei bona; illi qui non utitur recte mala.)

RIDDLE

¹³ If ye had not ploughed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

Old Testament: Judges, xiv, 18.

Riddle me, riddle me ree.

UNKNOWN. Old saying, meaning read my riddle correctly.

It may well be doubted whether human ingenuity can construct an enigma of the kind which human ingenuity may not, by proper application resolve.

EDGAR ALLAN POE, The Gold Bug.

¹⁴ What animal goes on four legs in the morning, two at noon, and three in the evening?

The riddle of the Sphinx. The Sphinx, in Greek legend, was a monster with the head and breasts of a woman, the body of a dog, the tail of a serpent, the paws of a lion, and a human voice. It frequented the neighborhood of Thebes, propounded riddles and devoured the people who could not solve them. The Thebans had been told by an oracle that the Sphinx would destroy herself if her riddle was solved, so the king promised his crown and his sister Jocasta to whoever should answer it. This was done by Oedipus, who observed that a man walked on all fours when a child, erect in the noon of life, and supported by a stick in old age. The Sphinx, on hearing the answer, dashed her head against a rock.

The Sphinx must solve her own riddle.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: History.

As that Theban monster that propos'd her riddle, And him, who solv'd it nor devour'd.

MILTON.

I am plain Davus, not Oedipus [the solver of riddles.] (Davus sum, non Oedipus.)

TERENCE, Andria, l. 194. (Act i, sc. 2.)

¹⁵ All that we caught, we left behind, and carried away all that we did not catch. ("Oor Davus aivouerd, den I ody Davus opouerd.")

The riddle, as recorded by PLUTARCH, and in The Contest of Homer and Hesiod, which caused the death of Homer, through vexation at his inability to solve it. It was propounded by some boys whom Homer met as they were returning from fishing, when he asked them if they had caught anything. They referred to fleas or lice, not to fish.

Beware of the riddle of the young boys. ('Αλλὰ μὴν οὐδὲν αἰσχροῦ φήλαται.)

UNKNOWN. Oracle given to Homer. (Greek Anthology. Bk. xiv, No. 65.)

In Ios the boys, weaving a riddle at the bidding of the Muses, vexed to death Homer, the singer of heroes.

ALCERUS OF MESSENE. On Homer. (Greek Anthology. Bk. vii, No. 1.)

Hereupon Homer remembered the oracle and, perceiving that the end of his life had come, composed his own epitaph. And while he was retiring from that place, he slipped in a clayey place and fell upon his side, and died, it is said, the third day after.

ALCIDAMUS, The Contest of Homer and Hesiod. Sec. 326.

There was a man, bespake a thing,
Which when the owner home did bring,
He that made it did refuse it:
And he that brought it would not use it,
And he that bath it doth not know
Whether he hath it yea or no.

SIR JOHN DAVIES, Riddle Upon a Coffin.

Much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world.

A handless man had a letter to write,
And he who read it had lost his sight;
The dumb repeated it word for word,
And deaf was the man who listened and heard.

WILLIAM WHEWELL, A Riddle.

A handless man a letter did write,
A dumb dictated it word for word;
The person who read it had lost his sight,
And deaf was he who listened and heard.
GEORGE BORROW, The Bible in Spain. A more accurate translation of an old Spanish riddle than that of Whewell.

'Twas whispered in heaven, 'twas muttered in hell.

HORACE SMITH, A Riddle on the Letter H.

'Twas in heaven pronounced, and 'twas muttered in hell,
And echo caught faintly the sound as it fell;
On the confines of earth 'twas permitted to rest,
And the depth of the ocean its presence confessed.

Yet in shade let it rest, like a delicate flower,
Ah, breathe on it softly,—it dies in an hour.

II—Ridicule: The Test of Truth

5 Jane borrow'd maxims from a doubting school,
And took for truth the test of ridicule;

Lucy saw no such virtue in a jest,
Truth was with her of ridicule the test.

GEORGE CRABBE, Tales of the Hall, Bk. viii, l. 126. (1819)

7 Truth, 'tis supposed, may bear all lights; and one of those principal lights or natural mediums by which things are to be viewed in order to a thorough recognition is ridicule itself.

ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER, LORD SHAFTESBURY, Essay on the Freedom of Wit and Humour. Pt. i, sec. 1. (1709)

How comes it to pass, then, that we appear such cowards in reasoning, and are so afraid to stand the test of ridicule?

LORD SHAFTESBURY, A Letter Concerning Enthusiasm. (1708)

We have oftener than once endeavoured to attach some meaning to that aphorism, vulgarly imputed to Shaftesbury, which however we can find nowhere in his works, that "ridicule is the test of truth."

CARLYLE, Essays: Voltaire.

It is commonly said, and more particularly by Lord Shaftesbury, that ridicule is the best test of truth.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Speech, Peoria, Ill., 16 Oct., 1854. The following, attributed to Lincoln, but not found, is probably based upon the above speech: "I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right; stand with him while he stands right, and part company with him when he goes wrong."

MACAULAY, Essays: Southey's Colloquies.

1 The right is more precious than peace.
WOODROW WILSON, War Message to Congress, 2 April, 1917.

II—Right and Wrong

2 One may go wrong in many different ways, but right only in one, which is why it is easy to fail and difficult to succeed—easy to miss the target and difficult to hit it.

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. ii, sec. 14.

Better, though difficult, the right way to go,
Than wrong, tho' easy, where the end is woe.
BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress. Pt. i.

All other ways are wrong, all other guides are false. . . . There is but one road that leads to Corinth.

WALTER PATER, Marius the Epicurean. Ch. 24.

3 I trust in God—the right shall be the right
And other than the wrong, while he endures.
ROBERT BROWNING, A Soul's Tragedy. Act i.

In the great right of an excessive wrong.
ROBERT BROWNING, The Ring and the Book: The Other Half-Rome, l. 1055.

4 But, dash my buttons, though you put it strong,
It's my opinion you're more right than wrong.
ROBERT BUCHANAN, The Last of the Hangmen.

5 Indiscriminate mashing up of right and wrong into a patent treadle.

CARLYLE, Later-Day Pamphlets. No. 2.

6 I prefer to do right and get no thanks, rather than to do wrong and get no punishment.
MARCUS CATO. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Marcus Cato, Ch. 8, sec. 9.)

7 Though syllogisms hang not on my tongue,
I am not surely always in the wrong!
'Tis hard if all is false that I advance—
A fool must now and then be right, by chance.
COWPER, Conversation, l. 93.

8 Good and bad are but names very readily transferable to that or this; the only right is what is after my constitution; the only wrong what is against it.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Self-Reliance.

9 To be engaged in opposing wrong affords, under the conditions of our mental constitution, but a slender guarantee for being right.

GLADSTONE, Time and Place of Homer: Introduction.

11 We are not satisfied to be right, unless we can prove others to be wrong.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Note-Books, p. 236.

12 Right and wrong exist in the nature of things. Things are not right because they are commanded, nor wrong because they are prohibited.

R. G. INGERSOLL, The Ghosts.

13 It is not that you do wrong by design, but that you should never do right by mistake.

JUVENAL, Letters: To the Duke of Grafton. Letter xii, 30 May, 1769.

14 When everyone is wrong, everyone is right. (Quand tout le monde a tort, tout le monde a raison.)

LA CHAUSSE, La Gouvernante. Act i, sc. 3.

15 Wrong ever builds on quicksands, but the Right

To the firm center lays its moveless base.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, Prometheus, l. 116.

16 For aye Valerius loathed the wrong,
And aye upheld the right.

MACAULAY, Battle of Lake Regillus. St. 18.

17 He that would sing, but hath no song,
Must speak the right, denounce the wrong.
GEORGE MACDONALD, How Shall He Sing?

18 In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,

Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,
And judgement from above.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. xi, l. 662.

19 The passionate love of Right, the burning hate of Wrong.

LEWIS MORRIS, The Diamond Jubilee.

The love of the Right, tho' cast down, the hate of victorious Ill,
All are sparks from the central fire of a boundless will.

LEWIS MORRIS, A New Orphic Hymn.

20 I see the right, and I approve it too,
Condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong pursue.

(Video meliora proboque, deteriora sequor.)
OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. vii, l. 20. (Garth, tr.)

1 Two blacks make no white.
H. G. BOHN, Proverbs, p. 548. To which is usually added, "Two wrongs do not make a right."

To prove by reason, in reason's despite,
That right is wrong, and wrong is right,
And white is black, and black is white.
ROBERT SOUTHEY, All for Love. Pt. ix, st. 29.

2 To do and dare, and die at need,
But while life lasts, to fight—
For right or wrong a simple creed,
But simplest for the right.
JAMES JEFFREY ROCHZ, Gettysburg.

3 Swift-footed to uphold the right
And to uproot the wrong.
CHRISTINA ROSSETTI, Noble Sisters.

4 Right now is wrong, and wrong that was is right,
As all things else in time are changed quite.
SPENSER, The Faerie Queene: Bk. v, Prologue.
St. 4. See also REASON: TO MAKE THE WORSE APPEAR THE BETTER REASON.

5 It often falls, in course of common life,
That right long time is overborne of wrong.
SPENSER, Faerie Queene. Bk. v, canto xi, st. 1.

6 A man finds he has been wrong at every preceding stage of his career, only to deduce the astonishing conclusion that he is at last entirely right.

R. L. STEVENSON, Crobbled Age and Youth.

7 Wrong and right
Are twain forever: nor, though night kiss day,
Shall right kiss wrong and die not.
SWINBURNE, Marino Faliero. Act iv, sc. 2.

7a The greatest right in the world is the right to be wrong.

HARRY WEINBERGER, The First Casualties in War. (New York Evening Post, 10 Apr., 1917.)

III—Rights

8 They made and recorded a sort of institution and digest of anarchy, called the Rights of Man.

EDMUND BURKE, Speech. (Works, iii, 221.)
The sacred rights of man are not to be rummaged from among old parchments or musty records.
They are written as with a sunbeam in the whole volume of human nature by the hand of divinity itself and can never be erased by mortal power.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON. See also under INDE-PENDENCE DAY.

9 What people have always sought is equality of rights before the law. For rights that were not open to all alike would be no rights. (Jus omnium semper est questitum æquabile; neque enim aliter esset jus.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. ii, ch. 12, sec. 42.

10 Public wrongs are but popular rights in embryo.

SIR CHARLES DARLING, Scintille Juris.

11 Wherever there is a human being, I see God-given rights inherent in that being, whatever may be the sex or complexion.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON. (Life. Vol. iii, 390.)

12 Every man has by the law of nature a right to such a waste portion of the earth as is necessary for his subsistence.

SIR THOMAS MORE, Utopia. Bk. ii.

The equal right of all men to the use of land is as clear as their equal right to breathe the air—it is a right proclaimed by the fact of their existence. For we cannot suppose that some men have a right to be in this world, and others no right.

HENRY GEORGE, Progress and Poverty. Bk. vii,
ch. 1.

13 What rights are his that dare not strike for them?

TENNYSON, The Last Tournament, l. 525.

RIGHTEOUSNESS

14 What is all righteousness that men devise?

What—but a sordid bargain for the skies?
WILLIAM COWPER, Truth, l. 75.

15 Be not righteous over much, neither make thyself over wise.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, vii, 16.

My son, these maxims make a rule,
And lump them aye thegither:
The Rigid Righteous is a fool,
The Rigid Wise anther.

BURNS, Address to the Unco Guid: Motto. A paraphrase of Ecclesiastes, vii, 16.

16 He was righteous in his own eyes.

Old Testament: Job, xxxii, 1.

17 Righteousness exalteth a nation.

Old Testament: Proverbs, xiv, 34.

18 I have been young and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

Old Testament: Psalms, xxxvii, 25.

The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar of Lebanon.

Old Testament: Psalms, xcii, 12. (Justus ut palma florebit.—Vulgate.)

I—Rising Early: Its Virtues

19 The early bird catches the worm.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains, p. 333. (1604)

And it is the early bird, as the saying goes, that gets the nations.

R. L. STEVENSON, Treasure Island. Ch. 30.

The early bird gets the late one's breakfast.
CHAMBERLAIN, West Worcester Words, 39.
The early ure gets the roofin' tack.
KIN HUBBARD, Abe Martin's Broadcast, p. 118.
At grammar-school I learned a verse, that is this: Sonat, sanctificat et dicit surgere mane. That is to say, Early rising maketh a man holy in body, holier in soul, and richer in goods.
ANTHONY FITZHERBERT, Husbandry, 101. (1523)
Rise you early in the morning, for it hath properties three:
Holiness, health, and happy wealth, as my father taught me.
HUGH RHODES, Boke of Nurture, 72. (1577)
Early to bed and early to rise,
Make a man healthy and wealthy and wise.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 38. (1670)
Who riseth late must trot all the day.
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, The Way to Wealth.
He that will thrive must rise at five;
He that hath thriven may lie till seven;
He that will never thriven may lie till eleven.
GABRIEL HARVEY, Marginalia, 102. (c. 1590)
Cock crows in the morning to tell us to rise,
And he who lies late will never be wise;
For early to bed and early to rise
Is the way to be healthy and wealthy and wise.
UNKNOWN, Old Nursery Rhyme.
He that riseth first is first dressed.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jocula Prudentium.
He that hath the name to be an early riser may sleep till noon.
JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs, 11. (1659)
Go to bed with the lamb and rise with the lark.
JOHN LYLY, Euphues and His England, p. 229.
To rise with the lark and go to bed with the lamb.
NICHOLAS BRETON, Court and Country.
Rise with the lark, and with the lark to bed.
JAMES HURDIS, The Village Curate.
Awake, the morning shines, and the fresh field Calls us; we lose the prime, to mark how spring
Our tenced plants, how blows the citron grove,
What drops the myrrh, and what the balmy reed,
How nature paints her colours, how the bee
Sits on the bloom, extracting liquid sweet.
MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. v, l. 20.
An early stirrer, by the rood!
SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act III, sc. 2, l. 3.
I am glad I was up so late; for that's the reason
I was up so early.
SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act II, sc. 3, l. 37.
Not to be abed after midnight is to be up betimes.
SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act II, sc. 3, l. 1.
Yet never sleep the sun up. Prayer shoud
Dawn with the day. There are set, awful hours

Twixt heaven and us. The manna was not good
After sun-rising; far day sullies flowers.
Rise to prevent the sun; sleep doth sin glut,
And heaven's gate opens when the world's is shut.
HENRY VAUGHAN, Silex Scintillans: Rules and Lessons. St. 2.
II—Rising Early: Its Drawbacks
Oh! how I hate to get up in the morning,
Oh! how I'd love to remain in bed;
For the hardest blow of all
Is to hear the bugler call,
"You've got to get up, you've got to get up,
You've got to get up this morning!"
IRVING BERLIN, Oh! How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning. Written at Camp Upton, 1917.
O it's nice to get up in the mornin' when the sun begins to shine,
At four or five or six o'clock in the good old summer time;
When the snow is snowin' and it's murky overhead,
O it's nice to get up in the mornin', but it's nicer to lie in bed.
HARRY LAUDER, It's Nice to Get Up in the Morning. (1913)
Heaven's help is better than early rising.
CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. II, ch. 34.
Prone on my back I greet arriving day,
A day no different than the one just o'er;
When I will be, to practically say,
Considerable like I have been before.
Why then get up? Why wash, why eat, why pray?
—Oh, leave me lay!
ELEANOR PRESCOTT HAMMOND, *Oh, Leave Me
Lay*. Published anonymously in the Contributors' Column of the Atlantic Monthly for August, 1922, as "by a well-known scholar."
They were early up, and never the nearer.
JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. I, ch. 2. (1546)
Wherein the poet's fortune is, I fear,
Still to be early up, but a'er the near.
BEN JONSON, Tale of a Tub: Epilogue.
(1633)
Let Taylor preach, upon a morning breezy,
How well to rise while night and larks are flying—
For my part, getting up seems not so easy
By half as lying.
THOMAS HOON, Morning Meditations.
Wherefore should master rise before the hens
Have laid the eggs?
THOMAS HOON, Morning Meditations.
A man that's fond precociously of stirring,
Must be a spoon!
THOMAS HOON, Morning Meditations.

¹Yonder see the morning blink:
The sun is up, and up must I,
To wash and dress and eat and drink
And look at things and talk and think
And work, and God knows why.
A. E. HOUSMAN, Last Poems. No. 11.

²Many a good man has caught his death of cold getting up in the middle of the night to go home.

LUKE McLUKE, Epigram.

³He that blesteth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted
a curse to him.

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxvii, 14.

⁴Yes; bless the man who first invented sleep, . . .

But blast the man with curses loud and deep, . . .

Who first invented, and went round advertising.

That artificial cut-off—Early Rising.

JOHN GOFFREY SAXE, Early Rising.

III—Rising: Exhortations

⁵Up rose the sun, and up rose Emelye.

CHAUCER, The Knights Tale, l. 1415.

⁶Waste not these hours so fresh and gay;
Leave thy soft couch and haste away.

JOANNA BAILLIE, Wake, Lady.

⁷Arise! come down! and, heart to heart,
Love, let me clasp in thee all these—

The sunbeam, of which thou art part,
And all the rapture of the breeze!—

Arise! come down! loved that thou art!

MADISON CAWEN, Morning Serenade.

⁸Awake thee, my lady love, wake thee and rise!
The sun through the bower peeps into thine
eyes!

GEORGE DARLEY, Sylvia: Serenade.

⁹Awake, awake, the morn will never rise,
Till she can dress her beauty at your eyes.

WILLIAM D'AVENANT, Morning.

¹⁰All want day till thy beauty rise;
For the grey morn breaks from thine eyes.

NATHANIEL FIELD, Matin Song.

¹¹O swan of slenderness, Dove of tenderness,
Jewel of joys, arise!

ALFRED PINCEVAL GRAVES, The Little Red Lark.

¹²Pack, clouds, away, and welcome, day,
With night we banish sorrow.

Sweet air, blow soft; mount, lark, aloft
To give my Love good-morrow!

THOMAS HEYWOOD, Matin Song.

¹³And winking Mary-buds begin
To ope their golden eyes:

With everything that pretty bin,
My lady sweet, arise.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 26.

¹⁴A birdie with a yellow bill
Hopped upon the window sill, Cocked his shining eye and said:
"Ain't you 'shamed, you sleepy-head?"
R. L. STEVENSON, Time to Rise.

RIVALRY

¹⁵Heaven cannot brook two suns, nor earth two masters.

ALEXANDER THE GREAT, to Darius. (PLUTARCH, Apothegms.)

We could not stall together
In the whole world.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, v, 1, 39.

Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign.

SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV. Act v, sc. 4, l. 65.

There was a Brutus once that would have brook'd
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome
As easily as a king.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar. Act i, sc. 2, l. 159.

For monarchs ill can rivals brook,
Even in a word, or smile, or look.

Nomina ponto*.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iv, ode 2, l. 1. Horace is alluding to the story of Icarus, who fell into the sea, afterwards called Icarian.

¹
Of nothing comes nothing: springs rise not above

Their source in the far-hidden heart of the mountains:

Whence then have descended the Wisdom and Love

That in man leap to light in intelligent fountains?

J. T. TROWBRIDGE, The Missing Leaf. St. 11.

III—Rivers: Description

²
And see the rivers how they run
Through wood and mead, in shade and sun,
Sometimes swift, sometimes slow,
Wave succeeding wave, they go
A various journey to the deep.
Like human life to endless sleep.

JOHN DYER, Grongar Hill, l. 93.

See the rivers, how they run,
Changeless toward a changeless sea.

CHARLES KINGSLEY, The Saint's Tragedy. Act II,
sc. 2.

⁵
There is a river in Macedonia; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth; . . . and there is salmon in both.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act IV, sc. 7, l. 28.

⁶
The current that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the enamell'd
stones,

Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act II, sc. 7, l. 25.

⁷
I chatter, chatter, as I flow
To join the brimming river,
For men may come and men may go,
But I go on for ever.

TENNYSON, The Brook, l. 47.

⁸
No check, no stay, this streamlet fears:
How merrily it goes.

'Twill murmur on a thousand years
And flow as now it flows.

UNKNOWN, On Fort Sumter.

⁵ Before the Roman came to Rye or out to Severn strode,
The rolling English drunkard made the rolling English road.

A reeling road, a rolling road, that rambles round the shire,
And after him the parson ran, the sexton and the squire.

A merry road, a mazy road, and such as we did tread

That night we went to Birmingham by way of Beachy Head.

G. K. CHESTERTON, The Rolling English Road.

⁶ This road is not passable,
Not even jackassable.

JESSE DOUGLAS, Epigram. Referring to an Indiana road in 1839.

⁷ The rule of the road is a paradox quite,
Both in riding and driving along;
If you keep to the left, you are sure to be right,

If you keep to the right you are wrong;
But in walking the streets 'tis a different case,
To the right it is right you should bear;
Whereas to the left should be left enough space

For those whom you chance to meet there.
HENRY ENSKINE, The Rule of the Road. (Notes and Queries, 27 Aug., 1910.)

⁸ Any road leads to the end of the world.
EDWARD FITZGERALD, Polonius, 86.

⁹ Great roads the Romans built that men might meet,
And walls to keep strong men apart, secure.
Now centuries are gone, and in defeat
The walls are fallen, but the roads endure.

¹⁶ What is the use of running when you are on the wrong road?

W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 868.

¹ I like a road that leads away to prospects bright and fair,
A road that is an ordered road, like a nun's evening prayer;
But best of all I love a road that leads to God knows where.

CHARLES HANSON TOWNE, The Best Road of All.

ROBIN

⁴ Robin, Robin Redbreast,
O Robin dear!
And a crumb of bread for Robin,
His little heart to cheer.

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, Robin Redbreast.

⁵ A robin redbreast in a cage
Puts all heaven in a rage.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Auguries of Innocence.

⁶ The robin is the one
That speechless from her nest
Submits that home and certainty
And sanctity are best.

EMILY DICKINSON, Poems. Pt. ii, No. 6.

⁷ Sweet Robin, I have heard them say
That thou wert there upon the day
The Christ was crowned in cruel scorn,
And bore away one bleeding thorn;
And so the blush upon thy breast,
In shameful sorrow, was impressed;
And thence thy genial sympathy
With our redeemed humanity.

GEORGE WASHINGTON DOANE, Robin Redbreast.

Bearing His cross, while Christ passed forth forlorn,
His God-like forehead by the mock crown torn,
A little bird took from that crown one thorn.
To soothe the dear Redeemer's throbbing head:
That bird did what she could; His blood, 'tis said,
Down dropping, dyed her tender bosom red.

HOSKYNs-ABRAHAM, The Redbreast: A Breton Legend.

On fair Britannia's isle, bright bird,

A legend strange is told of thee,—

'Tis said thy blithesome song was hushed
While Christ toiled up Mount Calvary, . . .
Twas then, dear bird, the legend says,
That thou, from out His crown, didst tear
The thorns, to lighten the distress,
And ease the pain that He must bear,
While pendant from thy tiny beak
The gory points thy bosom pressed,
And crimsoned with thy Saviour's blood
The sober brownness of thy breast.

The friendless bodies of unburied men.

JOHN WEBSTER, The White Devil. Act v, sc. 4.

¹² Art thou the bird whom Man loves best,
The pious bird with the scarlet breast,
Our little English Robin;

The bird that comes about our doors
When Autumn-winds are sobbing?
Art thou the Peter of Norway Boors?

Their Thomas in Finland,
And Russia far inland?
The bird that, by some name or other
All men who know thee call their brother?

ROMANCE

¹³ All's cold and grey without it [romance].
They that have had it have slipped in and out of heaven.

J. M. BARRIE, What Every Woman Knows.
Act ii.

¹⁴ Parent of golden dreams, Romance!
Auspicious queen of childish joys,
Who lead'st along, in airy dance,
Thy votive train of girls and boys.

BYRON, To Romance.

¹⁵ Romance, like a ghost, eludes touching. It is always where you were, not where you are.

G. W. CURTIS, Lotus-Eating: Saratoga.

¹⁶ Every form of human life is romantic.
T. W. HICCOMBS, A Plea for Culture.

¹ "Farewell, Romance!" the Cave-men said:
 "With bone well carved he went away.
 Flint arms the ignoble arrowhead,
 And jasper tips the spear to-day.
 Changed are the Gods of Hunt and Dance,
 And He with these. Farewell, Romance!" . . .
 Confound Romance! . . . And all unseen
 Romance brought up the nine-fifteen.

 surroundings.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH THE YOUNGER, Essays.
 (Quoted by BERT LESTON TAYLOR, The So-Called Human Race, p. 295.)

⁶ To romance we owe the spirit of adventure, the code of honour, both masculine and feminine.

GEORGE SANTAYANA, The Gentle Tradition at Bay.

⁷ Tradition wears a snowy beard. Romance is always young.

WHITTIER, Mary Garvin, l. 16.

⁸ Romance should never begin with sentiment.
 It should begin with science and end with a settlement.

OSCAR WILDE, An Ideal Husband, Act iii.

The worst of having a romance of any kind is that it leaves one so unromantic.

OSCAR WILDE, The Picture of Dorian Gray.
 Ch. 1.

⁹ When one is in love, one always begins by deceiving oneself, and one always ends by deceiving others. That is what the world calls a romance.

OSCAR WILDE, The Picture of Dorian Gray.

CÆSAR AUGUSTUS. (SUETONIUS, *De Vita
 Cæsarum: Divus Augustus*, Bk. ii, ch. 28, sec. 3.) This saying is given another meaning by Dion Cassius (lvi, 589), who applies it to Cæsar's consolidation of the government, in the following form: "That Rome, which I found built of mud, I shall leave you firm as a rock." Strictly speaking, "latericium" means "of sun-dried brick." (See under Law for

¹⁴ I am a Roman citizen. (Civis Romanus sum.) CICERO, In Verrem, No. vi, sec. 57. Describing the case of Publius Gavius, beaten with rods in the forum of Messina, "while in the meantime no groan was heard, no cry amid all this pain and between the sound of the blows, except the words, 'I am a Roman citizen.'"

As the Roman in days of old held himself free from indignity when he could say Civis Romanus sum, so also a British subject shall feel confident that the watchful eye and strong arm of England will protect him against injustice and wrong.

LORD PALMERSTON, Speech, House of Commons, 25 June, 1850.

I would have the English republic respected as ever the Roman commonwealth was.

¹⁷ The Roman Senate and People. (Senatus Populusque Romanus.)

The motto of Rome, denoted on Roman hannery, coins, etc., by the letters, S. P. Q. R.
Rabelais (Works, bk. iii, ch. 32) explains them as meaning, "Si Peu Que Rien." So little as to be nothing.

II—Rome: In Rome Do as the Romana Do

¹⁸ When I am here [at Milan] I do not fast on Saturday; when I am at Rome, I fast on a Saturday. (Quando hic sum, non jejuno Sabbato; quando Romæ sum, jejuno Sabbato.)
ST. AMBROSE, Advice to St. Augustine.

When you are in Rome, live in the Roman style;
when you are elsewhere, live as they live there.
(Cum fueris Romæ, Romano vivito more; cum fueris alibi, vivito sicut ibi.)

ST. AMBROSE. As quoted by Jeremy Taylor,
Ductor Dubitantium. Bk. i, ch. 1, sec. 5.

¹⁹ My mother, having joined me at Milan, found that the church there did not fast on Saturdays as at Rome, and was at a loss what to do. I consulted St. Ambrose, of holy memory, who replied, "When I am at Rome, I fast on a Saturday; when I am at Milan, I do not.
Follow the custom of the church where you are."

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. iii, sec. iv, mem. 1, subs. 5.

Good-breeding, as it is called, . . . is different in almost every country, and merely local; and every man of sense imitates and conforms to that local good-breeding of the place he is at.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 2 Oct., 1747.

When you are abroad, live in the manner of the place. (Cum fueris alibi, vivito more loci.)

Quoted by Don Diego, as warrant for following Henry VIII's religion while in England.

Aristo Punico ingenio inter penas usus.

LIVY, History. Bk. xxiv, sec. 61.

³ That is to say, if your religion's Roman, And you at Rome would do as Romans do, According to the proverb,—although no man, If foreign, is obliged to fast; and you, If Protestant, or sickly, or a woman, Would rather dine in sin on a ragout— Dine, and be d—d! I don't mean to be coarse, But that's the penalty, to say no worse.

BYRON, Beppo. St. 9.

III—Rome: Her Greatness

⁷ First among cities, the home of gods, is golden Rome. (Prima urbes inter, divum domus, aurea Roma.)

AUSONIUS, Ordo Urbium Nobilium, l. 1.

That queen of nations, absolutely great.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Doomsday: The Sixth Hour. St. 77.

⁸ A city greater than any upon earth, whose amplitude no eye can measure, whose beauty no imagination can picture, who raises a golden head amid the neighboring stars and with her seven hills imitates the seven regions of heaven, mother of arms and of law, who extends her sway over all the earth and was the earliest cradle of justice, this is the city which, sprung from humble beginnings, has stretched to either pole, and from one small place extended its power so that upon it the sun never sets. (In geminos axes parvæque a sede profecta Dispersit cum sole manus.)

CLAUDIAN, De Consulatu Stilichonis. Bk. iii, l. 130. See also under ENGLAND, SPAIN.

She alone among nations has received into her bosom those whom she has conquered, and has cherished all humanity as her sons, and not as her slaves.

Motto woven in ribbons worn in 1681 when a new parliament was summoned at Oxford. (HUME, History of England. Ch. 25.)

9 The Papacy is no other than the ghost of the deceased Roman Empire, sitting crowned upon the grave thereof.

THOMAS HOBBES, Leviathan. Pt. iii, ch. 42.

10 Religion went to Rome, subduing those, Who, that they might subdue, made all their foes.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church Militant, l. 61.

11 Why leave a serious, moral, pious home,
Scotland, renown'd for sanctity of old,
Far distant Catholics to rate and scold
For—doing as the Romans do at Rome?

THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Rae Wilson, l. 243.

12 Well has the name of Pontifex been given Unto the Church's head, as the chief builder
And architect of the invisible bridge
That leads from earth to heaven.

LONGFELLOW, The Golden Legend. Pt. v.

13 The Catholic Church . . . was great and respected before the Saxon had set foot on Britain. . . . And she may still exist in undiminished vigour when some traveller from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's.

MACAULAY, Essays: Ranke's History of the Popes. Often referred to as Macaulay's New Zealander. First published in the Edinburgh Review, Oct., 1840. See also under Greece the quotation from his essay on Mitford's Greece.

There is not, and there never was on this earth, a work of human policy so well deserving of examination as the Roman Catholic Church. . . . No other institution is left standing which carries the mind back to the times when the smoke of sacrifice rose from the Pantheon, and when camelopards and tigers abounded in the Flavian Amphitheatre.

MACAULAY, Essays: Ranke's History of the Popes.

The proudest royal houses are but of yesterday, when compared with the line of the Supreme Pontiffs. That line we trace back in an unbroken series from the pope who crowned Napoleon in the nineteenth century to the pope who crowned Pepin in the eighth; and far beyond the time of Pepin the august dynasty extends, till it is lost in the twilight of fable.

I—Roosevelt: Apothegma

⁷ You called me a megalomaniac—
I called you a Serpent's Tooth.
FRANKLIN P. ADAMS, T. R. to W. H. T. (Theodore Roosevelt to William H. Taft.)

At three o'clock Thursday afternoon, Theodore Roosevelt will walk on the waters of Lake Michigan.

UNKNOWN. Text of poster distributed by an unknown humorist in Chicago, 17 June, 1912, on the eve of the Republican convention which nominated Taft.

⁸ If I was him I'd call the book "Alone in Cuba."

FENLEY PETER DUNNE, referring to Roosevelt's The Rough Riders, a history of his campaign in Cuba during the Spanish-American war. "Rough Riders" was the popular name of the regiment, composed largely of cowboys, which Roosevelt had raised, and of which he was second in command, under Colonel Leonard Wood.

⁹ Now look, that damned cowboy is President of the United States.

both? (Ἡρά ῥόδα, ποδόμενος ἑαυτὸν ἄρα.)

DIONYSIUS THE SOPHIST. (Greek Anthology. Bk. v, epig. 81.)

Poor Peggy hawks nose-gays from street to street
Till—think of that who find life so sweet!—
She hates the smell of roses.

THOMAS HOOD, Miss Kilmansiege: Her Birth.

11 The said questions were asked with licence, and that it should remain under the rose.
(Sub rosa.)

SIR ROBERT DYMCKE, Letter to Stephen Vaughan, 1546. (State Papers, Henry VIII, ii, 200.) The phrase, "sub rosa," meaning secretly, is of unknown origin. With the ancients the rose was emblematic of secrecy, and when a host hung a rose above his tables, his guests understood that all words spoken under it were to remain secret. Later, roses were carved as decorations on the ceilings of council chambers and confessionals, with the same significance.

The rose is the flower of Venus; and Love, in order that her sweet dishonesties might be hidden, dedicated this gift of his mother to Harpocrates, the god of silence. Hence the host hangs the rose over his friendly tables, that his guests may know that beneath it what is said will be regarded as secret.

(Est rosa flos veneris; quo dulcia furta laterent, Harpocrati matris dote dicavit amor.

Inde rosam mensis hospes suspendit amicitia, Convivæ ut sub ea dicta tacenda sciant.)

GERTRUDE STEIN, The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas, p. 169.

II—Rose: Its Beauty

The rose that all are praising,
Is not the rose for me;
Too many eyes are gazing
Upon the faultless tree.
But there's a rose in yonder glen
That scorns the gaze of other men;
For me its beauty saving,—
Oh! that's the rose for me.

T. H. BAYLY, The Rose that All are Praising.

8
"For if I wait," said she,
"Till time for roses be,
For the moss-rose and the musk-rose,
Maiden-blush and royal-dusk rose,
What glory then for me
In such a company?—
Roses plenty, roses plenty,
And one nightingale for twenty!"
E. B. BROWNING, A Lay of the Early Rose.

9
Yon rose-buds in the morning dew,
How pure among the leaves see green!
BURNES, To Chloris.

While rose-buds scarcely show'd their hue,
But coyly linger'd on the thorn.
MONTGOMERY, The Adventures of a Star.

10
He came and took me by the hand
Up to a red rose tree,
He kept His meaning to Himself,
But gave a rose to me.

I did not pray Him to lay bare
The mystery to me;
Enough the rose was Heaven to smell,
And His own face to see.
RALPH HODGSON, The Mystery.

11
It was not in the winter
Our loving lot was cast:
It was the time of roses,
We plucked them as we passed.
THOMAS HOOD, Ballad.

12
The roses that in yonder hedge appear
Outdo our garden buds which bloom within;
But since the hand may pluck them every day,
Unmarked they bud, bloom, drop, and drift away.

JEAN INGELLOW, The Four Bridges. St. 61.

13
A Rose is sweeter in the bud than full blown.
JOHN LYLY, Euphues and His England, p. 314.
The rose is fairest when 't is budding new,
And hope is brightest when it dawns from fears;

The rose is sweetest washed with morning dew,
And love is loveliest when embalmed in tears.
SCOTT, The Lady of the Lake. Canto iv, st. 1.

The budding rose above the rose full blown.
WORDSWORTH, The Prelude. Bk. xi, l. 121.
Blinded alike from sunshine and from rain,
As though a rose should shut, and be a bud again.
JOHN KEATS, The Eve of St. Agnes. St. 27.

14
A root in the right soil,
Sun, rain, and a man's toil;
That, as a wise man knows,
Is all there is to a rose.
ORRILL MACKENZIE, Whitegates.

15 Sweet as the rose that died last year is the rose that is born to-day.
COSMO MONKEHOUSE, A Dead March.

16
Rose, thou art the sweetest flower
That ever drank the amber shower;
Rose, thou art the fondest child
Of dimpled Spring, the wood-nymph wild.
THOMAS MOORE, Odes of Anacreon. Ode xlv.

O rose! the sweetest blossom,
Of spring the fairest flower;
O rose! the joy of heaven.
JAMES GATES PERCIVAL, Anacreontic.

Sometimes, when on the Alpine rose,
The golden sunset leaves its ray,
So like a gem the flow'ret glows,
We thither bend our headlong way;
And though we find no treasure there,
We bless the rose that shines so fair.
THOMAS MOORE, The Crystal-Hunters.

1 And the rose, like a nymph to the bath address,
Which unveiled the depth of her glowing breast,
Till, fold after fold, to the fainting air,
The soul of her beauty and love lay bare.
SHELLEY, The Sensitive Plant. Pt. i, l. 29.

2 Roses all that's fair adorn;
Rosy-fingered is the morn;
Rosy-armed the nymphs are seen;
Rosy-skinned is Beauty's queen.
CHARLES WESLEY, Anacreontic.

3 You violets that first appear,
By your pure purple mantles known,
Like the proud virgins of the year,
As if the spring were all your own,
What are you when the rose is blown?
SIR HENRY WOTTON, To His Mistress, Elizabeth of Bohemia.

III—Rose and Thorn

4 Thus to the Rose, the Thistle:
Why art thou not of thistle-breed?
Of use thou'dst, then, be truly,
For asses might upon thee feed.
F. M. BOSENSTEDT, The Rose and Thistle.

5 But ne'er the rose without the thorn.
ROBERT HERRICK, The Rose.
There is no rose . . . in garden, but there is some thorn.

JOHN LYDGATE, Bochas. Prol., 9. (1430)
No rose without a thorn.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.
The sweetest rose hath his prickle.
JOHN LYLY, Euphues, p. 33. (1579)

I took her for a rose, but she breedeth a burr.
JOHN HAYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 10.

6 But the rose leaves herself upon the briar,
For winds to kiss and grateful bees to feed.
KEATS, On Fame, l. 6.

7 Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose.
MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. iv, l. 256.

8 When the rose perishes, the hard thorn is left behind. (Riget amissa spina relicta rosa.)

11 Better be stung by a nettle than pricked by a rose.

J. H. G. BORN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 327.

12 The rose does not bloom without thorns;
would that the thorns did not outlive the rose.
JEAN PAUL RICHTER, Titan. Zykel 105.

13 The rose saith in the dewy morn,
I am most fair;

Yet all my loveliness is born
Upon a thorn.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI, Consider the Lilies of the Field.

14 The rose and thorn, the treasure and dragon, joy and sorrow, all mingle into one.

SADI, Gulistan: Ch. vii, Apologue 19.

15 From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry VI. Act ii, sc. 4, l. 30.

But, alack, my hand is sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost, iv, 3, 111.

16 I am the one rich thing that morn
Leaves for the ardent noon to win;

Grasp me not, I have a thorn,
But bend and take my being in.
HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD, The Rose.

17 This world that we're a-livin' in
Is mighty hard to beat;

You git a thorn with every rose,
But ain't the roses sweet!
FRANK L. STANTON, This World.

18 The thorns he spares when the rose is taken;
The rocks are left when he wastes the plain;
The wind that wanders, the weeds wind-shaken,

These remain.

SWINBURNE, A Forsaken Garden. St. 3.

19 The best rose-bush, after all, is not that which has the fewest thorns but that which bears the finest roses.

HENRY VAN DYKE, Fisherman's Luck. Ch. vii.

IV—Rose: Its Frailty

20 As long as is one day, so long is the rose's life;

Her brief youth and age go hand in hand.
(Quam longa una dies, etas tam longa rosarum:

Cum pubescenti juncta senecta brevis.)

AUGUSTUS, De Rosis Nascentibus, l. 43.

The bloom of a rose passes quickly away,
And the pride of a Butterfly dies in a day.

JOHN CUNNINGHAM, The Rose and the Butterfly.

All June I bound the rose in sheaves,
Now, rose by rose, I strip the leaves.

ROBERT BROWNING, One Way of Love.

Loveliest of lovely things are they
On earth that soonest pass away.
The rose that lives its little hour
Is prized beyond the sculptured flower.

BRYANT, A Scene on the Banks of the Hudson.

Great is the rose
Infected by the tomb,
Yet burgeoning
Indifferent to death.

Great is the rose
That challenges the crypt,
And quotes millenniums
Against the grave.

NATHALIA CRANE, Song from Tadmor.

The fairest and the sweetest rose
In time must fade and beauty lose.

JOHN FLORIO, Second Fruits, 105.

Because the rose must fade,
Shall I not love the rose?

RICHARD WATSON GILDER, Song.

It is written on the rose
In its glory's full array:
Read what those buds disclose—
"Passing away."

FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS, Passing Away.

Sweet rose, whose hue, angry and brave,
Bids the rash gazer wipe his eye,
Thy root is ever in its grave,
And thou must die.

GEORGE HERBERT, Virtue.

She bloomed on earth, where the loveliest things
Have the saddest dower;
And Rose, she lived as the roses live,
For the space of an hour.
(Mais elle était du monde, où les plus belles choses

*Ont le pire destin;
Et Rose, elle e vécu ce que vivent les roses,
L'espace d'un matin.*)

FRANÇOIS DE MALHERBE, Rose. In a letter of condolence to M. du Perrier on the loss of his daughter, Rose.

Roses are beauty, but I never see

Those blood drops from the burning heart of June

Glowing like thought upon the living tree,
Without a pity that they die so soon,
Die into petals, like those roses old,
Those women, who were summer in men's hearts

Before the smile upon the Sphinx was cold.

JOHN MASEFIELD, Sonnets. No. 18.

'Tis the last rose of summer,
Left blooming alone;
All her lovely companions
Are faded and gone;

No flower of her kindred,
No rose-bud is nigh,
To reflect back her blushes,
Or give sigh for sigh.

THOMAS MOORE, The Last Rose of Summer.

Each Morn a thousand Roses brings, you say;
Yes, but where leaves the Rose of Yesterday?

OMAR KHAYYAM, Rubdydy. St. 9. (Fitzgerald, tr.)

The roses of seven hundred years
Have flamed and passed away
Since Omar steeped in golden tears
The Rose of Yesterday.

ADAM LINDSAY GORDON, The Rose of Yesterday.

When I have pluck'd the rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again,
It needs must wither: I'll smell it on the tree.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act v, sc. 2, l. 13.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd,
soon vaded,

Pluck'd in the bud, and vaded in the spring!

SHAKESPEARE [?], Passionate Pilgrim, l. 131.

De rose is sweet, but de rose can't stay,
But I'm mighty glad when it blooms my way;

De night fall dark but de Lawd send day,
An' de good Lawd know my name.

FRANK L. STANTON, De Good Lawd Know My Name.

The year of the rose is brief;
From the first blade blown to the sheaf,
From the thin green leaf to the gold,
It has time to be sweet and grow old,
To triumph and leave not a leaf.

SWINBURNE, The Year of the Rose.

The fairest things have fleetest end:
Their scent survives their close;

But the rose's scent is bitterness
To him that loved the rose!

FRANCIS THOMPSON, Daisy. St. 18.

V—Rose: Its Perfume

¹ I'll pu' the budding rose, when Phœbus peeps in view,
For it's like a baumy kiss o' her sweet bonie mou.

BURNS, The Poet.

² I am not the rose, but I have lived with the rose. (Je ne suis pas la rose, mais j'ai vécu avec elle.)

H. B. CONSTANT. (HAYWARD, Letters of Mrs. Piozzi: Introduction.) In his Guistan, Sadi represents a lump of clay still perfumed by the petals fallen from the rose-trees.

Yet, O thou beautiful Rose!
Queen rose, so fair and sweet,
What were lover or crown to thee
Without the Clay at thy feet?

JULIA C. R. DORR, The Clay to the Rose.

³ The jar will long keep the fragrance of what it was steeped in when new. (Quo semel

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 2, l. 69.

You may break, you may shatter the vase, if you will,
But the scent of the roses will hang round it still.

THOMAS MOORE, *Farewell!—But Whenever
You Welcome the Hour*.

You may break, you may shatter Watkins if you will, but the scent of the Roederer will hang round him still.

THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, Marjorie Daw.

⁴ And the rose herself has got Perfume which on earth is not.
KEATS, Bards of Passion and of Mirth, l. 15.

⁵ And sweeten'd every musk-rose of the dale.
MILTON, Comus, l. 496.

⁶ The rose distils a healing balm
The beating pulse of pain to calm.
THOMAS MOORE, Odes of Anacreon. Ode lv.

There was never a daughter of Eve but once, ere the tale of her years be done,
Shall know the scent of the Eden Rose, but once beneath the sun;

Though the years may bring her joy or pain,
fame, sorrow or sacrifice,

The hour that brought her the scent of the Rose,
she lived it in Paradise.

SUSAN K. PHILLIPS, The Eden-Rose. (Published anonymously in St. Louis Globe Democrat, 13 July, 1878. Quoted by Kipling in Mrs. Haskins' Six Out.)

⁷ Fell on the upturn'd face of these roses
That gave out, in return for the love-light,
Their odorous souls in an ecstatic death.

EDGAR ALLAN POE, To Helen, l. 11.

⁸ Die of a rose in aromatic pain.

POPE, Essay on Man, epis. i, l. 200.

⁹ The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.
SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. liv.

How fair is the Rose! what a beautiful flower!
The glory of April and May!
But the leaves are beginning to fade in an hour,
And they wither and die in a day.

Yet the Rose has one powerful virtue to boast,
Above all the flowers of the field:
When its leaves are all dead, and fine colours are lost,
Still how sweet a perfume it will yield!
ISAAC WATTS, The Rose.

VI—Rose: Red and White

¹⁰ Red as rose of Harpocrate.
E. B. BROWNING, Isobel's Child, l. 32.

A white rosebud for a guerdon.

E. B. BROWNING, *The Romance of the Swan's
Nest*. St. 12.

¹¹ Ah, ah, Cytherea! Adonis is dead.
She wept tear after tear with the blood which was shed,
And both turned into flowers for the earth's garden-close,
Her tears, to the windflower; his blood, to the rose.

E. B. BROWNING, A Lament for Adonis. St. 6.

¹² Red as a rose is she.
S. T. COLERIDGE, The Ancient Mariner. Pt. i, st. 9. Used by Rhoda Broughton as title for a novel.

¹³ In Heaven's happy bowers
There blossom two flowers,
One with fiery glow
And one as white as snow;
While lo! before them stands,
With pale and trembling hands,
A spirit who must choose
One, and one refuse.

R. W. GILDER, The White and Red Rose.

¹⁴ Roses at first were white,
Till they co'd not agree
Whether my Sappho's breast,
Or they more white sho'd be.

But being vanquish'd quite,
A blush their cheeks bespread:
Since which (believe the rest)
The Roses first came red.

ROBERT HERRICK, How Roses Came Red.

¹⁵ Rose of the desert, thou art to me
An emblem of stainless purity,—
Of those who, keeping their garments white,
Walk on through life with steps aright.

DAVID M. MOIR, The White Rose.

¹ Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfumed.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI. Act i, sc. 1, l. 254.

Hoary-headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.

Act ii, sc. 1, l. 107.

The red rose on triumphant brier.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.

Act iii, sc. 1, l. 95.

² Rosebuds, yellow and red,
Done in a prim, straight row,
Just on the edge of the thread,
Neither above nor below;
Each one shaded the same—
With all the art that she knew—
Making her cross-stitched name,
Ann Elizabeth Drew.
UNKNOWN, The Sampler.

VII—Rose and Love

³ She wore a wreath of roses,
The night that first we met.
T. H. BAYLY, She Wore a Wreath of Roses.
He wore, I think, a chasuble, the day when first we met.
BRET HARTE, The Ritualist.

⁴ O Rose, who dares to name thee?
No longer roseate now, nor soft, nor sweet,
But pale and hard and dry as stubble wheat,— Kept seven years in a drawer, thy titles shame thee.

E. B. BROWNING, A Dead Rose.

It was nothing but a rose I gave her,—
Nothing but a rose
Any wind might rob of half its savor,
Any wind that blows. . . .

Withered, faded, pressed between these pages,
Crumpled, fold on fold,—

Once it lay upon her breast, and ages
Cannot make it old!

HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD, A Sigh.

⁵ You smell a rose through a fence:
If two should smell it, what matter?
E. B. BROWNING, Lord Walter's Wife, l. 9.

⁶ The morning was beautiful, mild and serene,
All nature had waked from repose;
Maternal affection came silently in
And placed in my bosom a rose.

MARY ANN BUTLER, Whitsuntide Rose.
(WHITE, Life of Mrs. Ann Seton, p. 477.)

⁷ When love came first to Earth, the Spring
Spread rose-beds to receive him.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, When Love Came First.

And I will make thee beds of roses,

And a thousand fragrant posies.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE, The Passionate Shepherd to his Love. St. 3. (1599)

There will we make our beds of roses,
And a thousand fragrant posies.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Act iii, sc. 1, l. 19. (1600)

⁸ Or risen from play at your pale raiment's hem

God, grown adventurous from all time's repose,

Of your tall body climbed the ivory Tower
And kissed upon your mouth the mystic Rose.

G. K. CHESTERTON, A Little Litany.

Till the roses' lips grew pale with her sighs.

ROSE TERRY COOKE, Rêve du Midi.

⁹ A rose I marked, and might have plucked;
but she

Blushed as she bent, imploring me to spare her,

Nor spoil her beauty by such rivalry.

AUBREY DE VERE, Flowers I Would Bring.

¹⁰ She's just like a rose with a broken stem,
That is plucked and then cast aside;
The garden of love has no place for them,
When their fragrance and perfume have died.

For you can't take the stain from a woman's name,

Nor a flaw from the purest gem,

She chooses her path and must bear the blame—

She's a rose with a broken stem.

CARROLL FLEMING, A Rose with a Broken Stem.
(1901)

¹¹ If you were a white rose Columbine,
And I were a Harlequin,

I'd leap and sway on my spangled hips,
And blow you a kiss with my finger tips,
And woo a smile to your petal lips

With every glittering spin.

CROSBIE GASTIN, A Fantasy.

¹² Oh, raise your deep-fringed lids that close
To wrap you in some sweet dream's thrall;

I am the spectre of the rose

You wore but last night at the ball.

THÉOPHILE GAUTIER, The Spectre of the Rose.

¹³ I sent my love two roses,—one

As white as driven snow,

And one a blushing royal red,

A flaming Jacqueminot. . . .

My heart sank when I met her: sure

I had been overbold,

For on her breast my pale rose lay

In virgin whiteness cold.

Yet with low words she greeted me,
With smiles divinely tender;
Upon her cheek the red rose dawned,—
The white rose meant surrender.

JOHN HAY, The White Flag.

Should this fair rose offend thy sight,
Placed in thy bosom bare,
'Twill blush to find itself less white,
And turn Lancastrian there.

JAMES SOMERVILLE, The White Rose.

The sweetest flower that blows,
I give you as we part
For you it is a rose
For me it is my heart.

FREDERICK PETERSON, At Parting.

I saw the rose-grove blushing in pride,
I gathered the blushing rose—and sigh'd—
I come from the rose-grove, mother,
I come from the grove of roses.

GIL VICENT, I Come from the Rose-grove, Mother. (John Bowring, tr.)

Go, lovely rose—
Tell her that wastes her time and me,
That now she knows,
When I resemble her to thee,
How sweet and fair she seems to be.

EDMUND WALLER, Go, Lovely Rose.

Yet, though thou fade,
From thy dead leaves let fragrance rise;
And teach the maid
That goodness Time's rude hand defies,
That virtue lives when beauty dies.

RUIN

I—Ruin: Apothegms

A ruin—yet what ruin! from its mass
Walls, palaces, half-cities, have been rear'd.
BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 143. Referring to the Coliseum at Rome.

Tully was not so eloquent as thou,
Thou nameless column with the buried base!
BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 110.

There is a temple in ruin stands,
Fashion'd by long-forgotten hands;
Two or three columns, and many a stone,
Marble and granite, with grass o'ergrown!
Out upon time! it will leave no more
Of the things to come than the things be-fore!

BYRON, The Siege of Corinth. St. 18.

While in the progress of their long decay,
Thrones sink to dust, and nations pass away.

EARL OF CARLISLE, On the Ruins of Pastum.
See also under OBLIVION.

Crumpling a pyramid, humbling a rose,
The dust has its reasons wherever it goes.
NATHALIA CRANE, The Dust.

Men moralise among ruins.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Tancred. Bk. v, ch. 5.

There's a fascination frantic
In a ruin that's romantic.

W. S. GILBERT, The Mikado. Act ii.

So many great nobles, things, administrations,
So many high chieftains, so many brave na-tions,

So many proud princes, and power so splen-did,

In a moment, a twinkling, all utterly ended.
JACOPONE, De Contemptu Mundi. (Coles, tr., Old Gems in New Settings, p. 75.)

One minute gives invention to destroy;
What to rebuild, will a whole age employ.

CONGREVE, The Double-Dealer. Act i, sc. 3.

With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout.
MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ii, l. 996.

Havoc, and spoil, and ruin are my gain.
MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ii, l. 1009.

Prostrate the beauteous ruin lies; and all
That shared its shelter, perish in its fall.

WILLIAM PITT THE YOUNGER, (Poetry of the Anti-Jacobin. No. 36.)

Remains of rude magnificence.

SCOTT, Marmion. Canto iv, st. 11.

A fairer sight perchance than when it frown'd in power.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, The Poet's Pilgrimage to Waterloo. Pt. i, canto 4, st. 30.

To build up cities an age is needed, but an hour destroys them. A forest is long in grow-ing, but in a moment is reduced to ashes.
(Urbes constituit ætas: hora dissolvit: mo-mento fit cinis: diu sylvæ.)

SENeca, Naturales Questiones. Bk. iii, sec. 27.

We two will sink on the wild waves of ruin,
Even as a vulture and a snake outspent
Drop twisted in inextricable fight,
Into a shoreless sea.

SHILLAY, Prometheus Unbound. Act iii, sc. 1.

Red ruin, and the breaking up of laws.

TENNYSON, Guinevere, l. 423.

It gathers ruin as it rolls along.

JAMES THOMSON, Britannia, l. 215.

Lovely in death the beauteous ruin lay;
And if in death still lovely, lovelier there;
Far lovelier! pity swells the tide of love.
YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night iii, l. 104.

Final ruin fiercely drives
Her ploughshare o'er creation!
YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night ix, l. 167.

Stern ruin's ploughshare drives elate
Full on thy bloom.
BURNS, To a Mountain Daisy.

II—Ruin: Babylon and London

Old Testament: Isaiah, xli, 9.

Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen.
New Testament: Revelation, xviii, 2.

Babylon,
Learned and wise, hath perished utterly,
Nor leaves her speech one word to aid the sigh
That would lament her.

WORDSWORTH, Ecclesiastical Sonnets. Pt. i, No. 25.

It [Tyre] shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea.
Old Testament: Ezekiel, xxvi, 5.

² And when 'midst fallen London they survey
The stone where Alexander's ashes lay,
Shall own with humble pride the lesson just
By Time's slow finger written in the dust.
ANNA LETITIA BARBAULD, Eighteen Hundred and Eleven. (1811) The original of Macaulay's New Zealander.

She may still exist in undiminished vigour, when some traveller from New Zealand shall, in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's.

MACAULAY, Essays: Ranke's History of the Popes. (Edinburgh Review, Oct., 1840.)
Referring to the Roman Catholic Church.
See also ROME: THE CHURCH OF ROME.

³ What cities, as great as this, have . . . promised themselves immortality! Posterity can hardly trace the situation of some. The sorrowful traveller wanders over the awful ruins of others. . . . Here stood their citadel, but now grown over with weeds; there their senate-house, but now the haunt of every noxious reptile; temples and theatres stood here, now only an undistinguished heap of ruins.

GOLDSMITH, The Bee: No. iv, *A City Night-
Piece*. (27 Oct., 1759.)

When London shall be a habitation of bitterness, when St. Paul and Westminster Abbey shall stand shapeless and nameless ruins in the midst of an unpeopled marsh, when the piers of Waterloo Bridge shall become the nuclei of islets of reeds and osiers, and cast the jagged shadows of their broken arches on the solitary stream, some Transatlantic commentator will be weighing in the scales of some new and now unimagined system of criticism the respective merits of the Bells and the Fudges and their historians.

SHELLEY, Peter Bell the Third: Dedication.
(1819)

At last, some curious traveller from Lima will visit England, and give a description of the ruins of St. Paul's, like the editions of Balber and Palmyra.

HORACE WALPOLE, Letter to Horaci Mann. 24
Nov., 1774.

When I have been indulging this thought I have,
in imagination, seen the Britons of some future century, walking by the banks of the Thames, then overgrown with weeds and almost impossible with rubbish. The father points to his son where stood St. Paul's, the Monument, the Bank, the Mansion House, and other places of the first distinction.

UNKNOWN, Humorous Thoughts on the Ramoval of the Seat of Empire and Commerce.
(London Magazine, 1745.)

⁴ Who knows but that hereafter some traveller like myself will sit down upon the banks of the Seine, the Thames, or the Zuyder Zee, where now, in the tumult of enjoyment, the heart and the eyes are too slow to take in the multitude of sensations,—who knows but that he will sit down solitary amid silent ruins, and weep a people inurned, and their greatness changed into an empty name?

CONSTANTIN CHASSEDEUR, *COMTE DE VOL-
NEY, Ruines*. Ch. 2. (1791)

⁵ Where now is Britain? . . .
Even as the savage sits upon the stone
That marks where stood her capitols, and hears

The bittorn booming in the weeds, he shrinks
From the dismaying solitude.

HENRY KIRKE WHITE, Time. (1803)

⁶ The state of England and the once prosperous city of London, [described] in a letter from an American Traveller, dated from the ruinous portico of St. Paul's, in the year 2199, to a friend settled in Boston, the metropolis of the Western Empire.

Late Deceased* [the second Lord Lyttelton] published at London in 1780.

III—Ruin: Personal

⁷ All men that are ruined, are ruined on the side of their natural propensities.

BURKE, On a Regicide Peace.

So fond are mortal men
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves to invite.

MILTON, Samson Agonistes, l. 1682.

⁸ He's undone, horse and man.

JOHN CLARKE, Paramitologia, 86. (1639)

⁹ The road to ruin is always in good repair;
the travellers pay the expense of it.

(Cautiousness vixit iocunde ruina.)

LOWELL, The Ballad of the Civil War, Bk. I, l. 150. Referring to JULIUS CAESAR.

There are the ruins of the noblest man

That ever lived in the tide of times.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar, Act III, sc. 1, l. 256.

It's all up, all over, you're done for. (Activist, licet, peristi.)

TRACY, Bumuckus, l. 54. (Act I, sc. 1.)

Truly, sir, when a man is ruined, 'tis but the duty of a Christian to tell him of it.

FARGUES, The Twin Rivals, Act I, sc. 1.

RULE

No rule is so general, which admits not some exception.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy, Pt. I, sec. II, mem. 2, subs. 3. (1621)

There is no rule without an exception.

CHRYSTIES, Don Quixote, Pt. II, ch. 18.

The exception proves the rule.

JOHN WILSON, The Cheats: To the Reader. (1864)

Exceptions only prove the rule.

BRON, Letters and Journals, Vol. I, p. 204.

For nothing goes for sense or light,

That will not with old rules jump right.

BYRON, Hudibras, Pt. I, canto 3, l. 135.

I don't see the use in drawin' hard and fast rules. You only have to break 'em.

JOHN GALSWORTHY, Eldest Son, Act I, sc. 2.

Rules and models destroy genius and art.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, On Taste.

What he doth, he doth by rule of thumb, and not by art.

SIR WILLIAM HOPE, The Fencing-Master, 157. (1692)

No rule so good as rule of thumb, if it hit.

JOHN KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, 256. (1791)

Obtruding false rules pranked in reason's garb.

MILTON, Comus, l. 759.

Rules and precepts are of no value without natural capacity. (Nihil præcepta arque artes valere nisi adjuvante natura.)

all the passions. (Cupido dominandi cunctis affectibus flagrantior est.)

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. iv, sec. 53.

³ He that only rules by terror
Doeth grievous wrong.
Deep as hell I count his error.
Let him hear my song.

TENNYSON, The Captain, l. 1.

⁴ We shall exult, if they who rule the land
Be men who hold its many blessings dear,
Wise, upright, valiant; not a servile band
Who are to judge of danger which they fear,
And honour which they do not understand.

WORDSWORTH, *Poems Dedicated to National
Independence*. Pt. i, No. 27.

⁵ Whatsoever ye brag or boast,
My master yet shall rule the roast.

UNKNOWN, Carpenter's Tools. (c. 1400) (HALL-bonds*. See also APPENDIX.

3 I will sing, I will go, and never ask me why
I was born a rover and a passer-by.
RIDGELY TORRENCE, Eye-Witness.
I seem to myself like water and sky,
A river and a rover and a passer-by.
RIDGELY TORRENCE, Eye-Witness.

4 Wanderers of the street, to whom is dealt
The bread which without industry they find.
WORDSWORTH, Poems Dedicated to National Independence. Pt. ii, No. 13.

4a Oh, why don't you work like other men do?
How the hell can I work when there's no work to do?
Hallelujah, I'm a bum, hallelujah, bum again,
Hallelujah, give us a hand-out to revive us again.

UNKNOWN, Hallelujah, I'm a Bum. There are several versions of this song.
This old song, heard at the water tanks of railroads in Kansas in 1897 and from harvest hands who worked in the wheat fields of Pawnee County, was picked up later by the I. W. W.'s, who made verses of their own for it and gave it wide fame.
CARL SANDBURGH, The American Songbag, p. 184.

VALENTINE

5 How different from our dreary fashion
Of playing little games with passion,
The flippant and ironic mode
Of using love as episode,
Of chinning to the fourteenth line
To make a trivial valentine.

JOSEPH AUSLAENDER, Letter to Emily Dickinson.

6 For this was on St. Valentine's day,
When every fowl cometh there to choose his mate.

CHAUCEUR, The Parlement of Foules, l. 309.
When you hear the birds call for their mates,
Ask if it be St. Valentine, their coupling day.
BAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Thierry and Theodore. Act iii, sc. 1.

Saint Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.
Act iv, sc. 1, l. 143.

Upon Friday is Saint Valentine's Day, and every bird chooseth him a mate.
UNKNOWN, Paston Letters, iii, 169.

7 Muse, bid the Morn awake!
Sad Winter now declines,
Each bird doth choose a mate;
This day's Saint Valentine's.
MICHAEL DRAYTON, To His Valentine.

8 Last Valentine, the day when birds of kind
Their paramours with mutual chirpings find.
JOHN GAY, Shepherd's Week: Thursday, l. 37.

9 Oft have I heard both youths and virgins say, Birds choose their mates, and couple too, this day:
But by their flight I never can devine
When I shall couple with my Valentine.
ROBERT HERRICK, To His Valentine.

10 Oh, if it be to choose and call thee mine,
Love, thou art every day my Valentine!
THOMAS HOOD, For the Fourteenth of February.

11 Hail to thy returning festival, old Bishop Valentine! Great is thy name in the rubric, thou venerable Archflamen of Hymen! Immortal Go-between; who and what manner of person art thou? Art thou but a nome, typifying the restless principle which impels poor humans to seek perfection in union? or wert thou indeed a mortal prelate, with thy tippet and thy rochet, thy apron on, and decent lawn sleeves? Mysterious personage! like unto thee, assuredly, there is no other mitred father in the calendar.

CHARLES LAMER, Essays of Elia: Valentine's Day.
Thou comest attended with thousands and ten thousands of little Loves. . . . Singing Cupids are thy choristers and thy preceptors; and instead of the crossier, the mystical arrow is borne before thee. . . .

This is the day on which those charming little minstrels, cycloped Valentines, cross and inter-cross each other at every street and turning. The weary, and all forespent twopenny postman sinks beneath a load of delicate embarrassments, not his own. . . . In these little visual interpretations, no emblem is so common as the heart—that little three-cornered exponent of all our hopes and fears,—the bestuck and bleeding heart. . . .

Good-morrow to my Valentine, sings poor Ophelia, and no better wish, but with better auspices,
we wish to all faithful lovers, who are not too wise to despise old legends, but are content to rank themselves humble diocessans of old Bishop Valentine and his true church.

CHARLES LAMER, Essays of Elia: Valentine's Day.
12 Called out in the morning by Mr. Macre, whose voice my wife hearing in my dressing-chamber with me, got herself ready, and came down and challenged him for her valentine.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 14 Feb., 1660. It was a common practice in England to choose a sweetheart or special friend for the ensuing year, on St. Valentine's day, and the lady in the case of course expected a gift. (See Paston Letters, II, 24.)

Here Mrs. The. shewed me my name upon her breast as her Valentine, which will cost me 20s. SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 3 March, 1663.

By and by comes Mrs. Pierce, with my name in her bosom for her Valentine, which will cost me money.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 15 Feb., 1666.

To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day,
All in the morning betime.

And I a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iv, sc. 5, l. 48.

The rose is red, the violet's blue,
Pinks are sweet, and so are you.

UNKNOWN, A Rhyme for St. Valentine's Day. The American version is usually, "Sugar is sweet, and so are you."

I claim there ain't Another Saint
As great as Valentine.

Valour's a mouse-trap, wit a gin,
Which women oft are taken in.
BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. I, canto 3, l. 391.

He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubbed, can lose no honour by 't.
BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. I, canto 3, l. 1041.

Never had valour, no not ours, before
Done aught like this upon the land or main:
Where not to be overcome was to do more
Than all the conquests former kings did gain.
DRYDEN, Annus Mirabilis. St. 80.

Valor consists in the power of self-recovery.
EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Circles.

'Tis still observed those men most valiant are
Who are most modest ere they came to war.
EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Courage. Quoted.

Whatever valour true is found,
True modesty will there abound.
W. S. GILBERT, Yeomen of the Guard. Act I.

Our valours are our best gods.
JOHN FLETCHER, Bonduce.

A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities.
GEORGE HERBERT, The Church-Porch. St. 42.

Valour that parleys is near yielding.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jocula Prudentum.

All honor to you in your valor, as says the godlike phrase of Cato. (Macte Virtute esto, inquit sententia diva Catonis.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. I, sat. 2, l. 31.

Fear to do base unworthy things, is valour;
If they be done to us, to suffer them
Is valour too.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.
I never thought so angry person valiant. . . .
No man is valiant by being angry,
But he that could not valiant be without.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.
That valour lies in the eyes o' the lookers on,
And is called valour with a witness.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.
The things true valour's exercised about
Are poverty, restraint, captivity,
Banishment, loss of children, long disease:
The least is death. . . . So a mind affecting
Or undertaking dangers for ambition, . . .
Deserves the name of daring, not of valour.
And over-daring is as great a vice
As over-fearing. . . . A valiant man
Ought not to undergo, or tempt a danger,
But worthily, and by selected ways:
He undertakes with reason, not by chance.
His valour is the salt to his other virtues,
They are all unseasoned without it.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.
Rivalry in valor spurred them on. (Stimulus dedit æmula virtus.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. I, l. 120.

More childish valorous than manly wise.
CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE, Tamburlane. Pt. I, act iv, sc. 1.

Instead of rage
Deliberate valour breath'd, firm and unmov'd
With dread of death to flight or foul retreat.
MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. I, l. 553.

No thought of flight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argued fear; each on himself relied,
As only in his arm the moment lay
Of victory.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. vi, l. 236.

In vain doth valour bleed
While Avarice and Rapine share the land.
MILTON, Sonnet: To the Lord General Fairfax.

Valor has its limits, like the other virtues.
(La vaillance a ses limites, comme les autres vertus.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. I, ch. 14.

You will find many men most unjust, most impious, most intemperate, and most ignorant, yet extremely valorous.

PLATO, Protagoras. Sec. 349.

Valour, destitute of other virtues, cannot render a man worthy of any true esteem. . . . A man may be very valiant, and yet impious and vicious.

⁴ When valour preys on reason, It eats the sword it fights with.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act iii, sc. 13, l. 199.

He that loves himself Hath not essentially but by circumstance The name of valour.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI. Act v, sc. 2, l. 38.

⁶ What valour were it, when a cur doth grin, For one to thrust his hand between his teeth, When he might spurn him with his foot away?

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act i, sc. 4, l. 56.

He's truly valiant that can suffer wisely The worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs

His outsides, to wear them like his raiment, carelessly;

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart To bring it into danger.

SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens. Act iii, sc. 5, l. 31.

⁸ Virtue is of so little regard in these costermonger times that true valour is turned bear-herd.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act i, sc. 2, l. 191.

⁷ My valour is certainly going!—it is sneaking off!—I feel it oozing out, as it were, at the palms of my hands.

SHEPPARD, The Rivals. Act v, sc. 3.

⁹ Valor, gradually overpowered by the delicious poison of sloth, grows torpid. (Blandoque veneno Desidia virtus paulatim evicta senescit.)

town where 'tis kept is "lighter than vanity."

BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress. Pt. I. Bunyan is quoting Psalms lxli, 9.

There is a great quantity of eating and drinking, making love and jilting, laughing and the contrary, smoking, cheating, fighting, dancing and fiddling; there are bullocks pushing about, bucks ogling the women, knaves picking pockets. . . .
Yes, this is Vanity Fair; not a moral place certainly; not a merry one, though very noisy.

THACKERAY, Vanity Fair: Before the Curtain.
(1848)

15
There is no living in the world without a complaisant indulgence for people's weaknesses, and innocent, though ridiculous, vanities.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 16 Oct., 1747.

You will easily discover every man's prevailing vanity by observing his favourite topic of conversation; for every man talks most of that which he has most a mind to be thought to excel in.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 16 Oct., 1747.

¹⁸ I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs,
A palace and a prison on each hand;

I saw from out the wave her structures rise
As from the stroke of the enchanter's wand:
A thousand years their cloudy wings expand
Around me, and a dying Glory smiles
O'er the far times, when many a subject land
Look'd to the winged Lion's marble piles,
Where Venice sat in state, throned on her hundred isles!

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 1.
She looks a sea Cybele, fresh from ocean,
Rising with her tiara of proud towers
At airy distance, with majestic motion,
A ruler of the waters and their powers.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 2.
In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more,
And silent rows the songless gondolier;
Her palaces are crumbling to the shore,
And music meets not always now the ear;
Those days are gone, but Beauty still is here;
States fall, arts fade, but Nature doth not die,
Nor yet forget how Venice once was dear,
The pleasant place of all festivity,
The revel of the earth, the masque of Italy!
BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 3.

1 O happy streets! to rumbling wheels unknown,
No carts, no coaches, shake the floating town!
JOHN GAY, Trivia. Bk. i, l. 99.

2 White swan of cities, slumbering in thy nest
So wonderfully built among the reeds
Of the lagoon, that fences thee and feeds,
As sayeth thy old historian and thy guest!
LONGFELLOW, Venice.

3 Be thou perpetual! (Esto perpetua!)
PIETRO SARTI, Dying Apostrophe to Venice, 15
Jan., 1623.

4 Many a time and oft
In the Rialto you have rated me.
SHAKESPEARE, Merchant of Venice, i, 3, 108.

5 Once did She hold the gorgeous east in fee;
And was the safeguard of the west: the worth

Of Venice did not fall below her birth,
Venice, the eldest Child of Liberty.
She was a maiden City, bright and free;
No guile seduced, no force could violate;
And, when she took unto herself a Mate,
She must espouse the everlasting Sea. . . .
Men are we, and must grieve when even the Shade

Of that which once was great is passed away.
WORDSWORTH, On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic.

VENUS

6 Is Venus odious to brides? Or do they mock
The joy of their parents with false tears?
(Estne novis nuptis odio Venus atque paren-tum Frustrantur falsis gaudia lacrimulis?)
CATULLUS, Odes. No. lxxiv, l. 15.

7 Venus will not charm so much without her attendant Graces, as they will without her.
LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 18 Nov., 1748.

8 Wot's the good o' callin' a young 'ooman a Venus or a angel, Sammy?
CHARLES DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 33.

9a Now the Graces are four and the Venuses two,
And ten is the number of Muses;
For a Muse and a Grace and a Venus are you,
My dear little Molly Trefusis!
AUSTIN DOBSON, Molly Trefusis. See 820:2.

9 Creator Venus, genial pow'r of Love,
The bliss of men below, and gods above,
Beneath the sliding sun thou runn'st thy race,
Dost fairest shine, and best become thy place.
For thee the winds their eastern blasts forbear,
Thy month reveals the spring, and opens all the year.

Thee, Goddess, thee the storms of winter fly,
Earth smiles with flow'rs renewing; laughs
the sky.

Venus smiles not in a house of tears.

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet. Act. iv. sc. 1, l. 8.

Lo, this is she that was the world's delight;
The old grey years were parcels of her might;
The strewings of the ways wherein she trod
Were the twin seasons of the day and night.

SWINBURNE, Laus Veneris. St. 3.

Lo, she was thus when her clear limbs enticed
All lips that now grow mad with kissing Christ.

SWINBURNE, Laus Veneris. St. 4.

Behold, my Venus, my soul's body, lies
With my love laid upon her garment-wise,
Feeling my love in all her limbs and hair
And shed between her eyelids through her eyes.

SWINBURNE, Laus Veneris. St. 5.

⁶ This maxim's into common favour grown,—
Vice is no longer vice, unless 'tis known.
Virtue indeed may barefaced take the field;
But vice is virtue when 'tis well conceal'd.
Should raging passion drive thee to a whore,
Let Prudence lead thee to a postern door;
Stay out all night, but take especial care
That Prudence bring thee back to early prayer.

As one with watching and with study faint,
Reel in a drunkard, and reel out a saint. . . .
Vice must be vice, virtue be virtue still,
Though thousands rail at good and practise ill.

Rags are royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake.

BARTLEY T. CAMPBELL, The White Slave. Act III.

⁵ For virtue which alone is free, cannot be brought into subjection. (Virtus enim servare non potest, quæ sola libera est.)

JEROME OROZUS, De Gloria. Bk. i, ch. 7.

⁶ Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence,

The surest guard is innocence:

None knew, till guilt created fear,

What darts or poison'd arrows were.

(Integer vitæ scelerisque purus

Non eget Mauris jaculis neque arcu

Nec venenatis gravida sagittis,

Fuice, pharetra.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. i, ode 22, st. 1. (Dillon, tr.)

⁸ With virtue and quietness one may conquer the world.

LAO-TSEZ, The Simple Way. No. 45.

⁹ Virtue could see to do what virtue would

By her own radiant light, though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk.

MILTON, Comus, l. 373.

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade.

SPENCER, Fairie Queene. Bk. i, canto i, st. 12.

¹⁰ Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report: if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

New Testament; Philippians, iv, 8.

¹¹ Divinity has three elements of superiority, incorruption, power, and virtue, and the most reverend and divinest of these is virtue; for in fundamental justice nothing participates except through the exercise of intelligent reasoning powers.

PLUTARCH, Lives: Aristides. Ch. 6, sec. 2.

¹² Virtue, the most pleasing and valuable possession in the world. (Ἀρετὴ, ἡ ἀρίστη καὶ ἡ ἀγαθὴ οὐδὲν ὀκνᾷ φέρειν.)

PLUTARCH, Lives: Solon. Sec. 7.

In virtue are riches. (In virtute divitiæ.)

CICERO, Paradoxa, vi, 2.

Silver and gold are not the only coin; virtue too passes current all over the world.

EURIPIDES, Oedipus. Frag. 546.

Of less worth than gold is silver, than virtue gold.

(Vilius argentum est auro, virtutis aurum.)

¹⁵ Virtue, not rolling suns, the mind matures.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night v, l. 772.

IV—Virtue: Its Difficulty

¹⁶ There is no road or ready way to virtue.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medicæ. Pt. i, sec. 55.

¹⁷ How far from easy is virtue! How difficult is even a continual pretence of virtue! (Quam non est facilis virtus! Quam vero difficilis ejus diuturna simulatio.)

CICERO, Epistola ad Atticum. Bk. viii, epia. 1.

¹⁸ Virtue proceeds through toil. (Ἄ ἀρετὴ βάλει δὲ πόρθευ.)

EURIPIDES, Heracles, l. 625.

Between us and Virtue the gods placed sweet: long and steep is the path that leads to her; but when a man has reached the top, then is she easy to reach.

HESIOD, Works and Days, l. 289.

The steep path of virtue. (Virtutis viam ardua.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iii, ode 24, l. 44.

¹⁹ Virtue requires a rough and stormy passage; she will have either outward difficulties to wrestle with . . . or internal difficulties.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 11.

Virtue is the roughest way,

But proves at night a bed of down.

SIR HENRY WOTTON, On the Imprisonment of the Earl of Essex.

OWID, Art Amatoria. Bk. ii, l. 537.

² Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes. SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act i, sc. 3, l. 38.

T is but the fate of place, and the rough brake That virtue must go through.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act i, sc. 2, l. 75.

My heart laments that virtue cannot live Out of the teeth of emulation.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 13.

³ Virtue struggles after fame, regardless of the adverse heights. (Perque aspera dura Nititur ad laudem virtus interrita clivo.)

SILIUS ITALICUS, Punica. Pl. iv, l. 605.

⁴ It is easy enough to be prudent,
When nothing tempts you to stray;
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away;
But it's only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth,
Is the one that resists desire.

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX, Worth While.

V—Virtue: Its Rewards

⁵ Virtue is its own reward. (Officii fructus sit ipsam officium.)

CICERO, De Finibus. Bk. ii, sec. 73.

Virtue is its own reward. (Ipsa quidem Virtus pretium sibi.)

CLAUDIAN, Panegyricus Dictus Manlio Theodoro Consul, l. 1.

Virtue, sir, is its own reward.

DRYDEN, The Assumption. Act iii, sc. 1. Also Tyrannic Love, ii, 3; HOMER, Douglas, iii, 1;

PRIDE, Imitations of Horace, iii, 2; etc.

The only reward of virtue is virtue.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Friendship.

Yet why should learning hope success at court?

Why should our patriots' virtues cause support?

Why to true merit should they have regard?

They knew that virtue is its own reward.

JOHN GAY, Epistle to Paul Melhuken, l. 39.

Virtue herself is her own fairest reward. (Ipsa quidem virtus sibi pulcherrima merces.)

SILIUS ITALICUS, Punica. Bk. xlii, l. 663.

Virtue is its own reward. There's a pleasure in doing good which sufficiently pays itself.

SIR JOHN VANBRUGH, The Relapse. Act v, sc. 1.

⁶ Honor is the reward of virtue. (Honor est primum virtutis.)

CICERO, Philippica. No. iv, sec. 81.

In virtue there are many grades, and the highest glory is won by the highest virtue. (In virtute multi sunt aditus, ut in gloria maxime excellat, qui virtute plurimum præstat.)

CICERO, Pro Cæne Plancio. Ch. xiv, sec. 60.

Only virtue wins eternal fame.

PETRARCH, The Triumph of Fame. Pt. i, l. 183.

⁷ For blessings ever wait on virtuous deeds,
And though a late, a sure reward succeeds.

CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act v, sc. 12.

⁸ Either virtue is an empty name, or the wise man rightly seeks it as his glory and reward. (Aut virtus nomen inane est, Aut decus et pretium recte petit experiens vir.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 17, l. 41.

⁹ Virtue may be assailed, but never hurt,
Surprised by unjust force, but not enthralled,
Yea, even that which mischief meant most harm,

Shall in the happy trial prove most glory.

MILTON, Comus, l. 589.

¹⁰ Not among many thousands will you find
One man who considers virtue its own reward.
(Nec facile invenias multis in milibus unum, Virtutem pretium qui putet esse sui.)

OWID, Epistula ex Ponto. Bk. ii, epis. 3, l. 11.

When the prizes fall to the lot of the wicked, you will not find many who are virtuous for virtue's sake.

SALLUST, History. Bk. i, frag.

¹¹ Virtue will not be followed except for her own sake. (La vertu ne veult estre suivie que pour elle mesme.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 1.

¹² In your opinion virtue requires no reward and is to be sought for itself. (Iudice te mercede caret per seque petenda est.)

OWID, Epistula ex Ponto. Bk. ii, epis. 3, l. 35.

Beauty, goodness, justice, and the like, each exists in and for itself.

PLATO, (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Plato. Bk. iii, l. 13.)

O let us still the secret joy partake,

To follow virtue even for virtue's sake.

POPE, Temple of Fame, l. 364.

¹³ You ask what I seek from virtue? Itself. For virtue has nothing better to give; its value is in itself.

SENECA, De Vita Beata. Ch. ix, sec. 4.

¹⁴ One should seek virtue for its own sake, and not from hope or fear, or any external motive. It is in virtue that happiness consists, for virtue is the state of mind which tends to make the whole of life harmonious.

ZENO. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Zeno. Bk. vii, 89.)

VI—Virtue and Happiness

¹⁵ Here will I hold, if there's a Power above
(And that there is all nature cries aloud Through all her works), he must delight in virtue;

And that which he delights in must be happy.
Anonymous, Cato. Act v, sc. 1. Inscribed by Franklin on his book of virtues.

¹ Virtue, the strength and beauty of the soul,
 Is the best gift of Heaven: a happiness
 That even above the smiles and frowns of fate
 Exalts great Nature's favourites.

JOHN ARMSTRONG, Art of Preserving Health.
 Bk. iv, l. 284.

² Neither can the virtues exist without happy life, nor happy life without the virtues. (Nec enim virtutes sine beata vita coherere possunt nec illa sine virtutibus.)

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. v,
 ch. 28, sec. 80.

³ Well may your hearts believe the truths I tell:

"Th' virtue makes the bliss, where'er we dwell."
 WILLIAM COLLINS, Persian Eclogues. No. i, l. 5.

Virtue alone is happiness below.

GEORGE CRABBE, The Borough. Letter xvi.

⁴ You may be more happy than princes, if you will be more virtuous.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1738.

Be in general virtuous, and you will be happy.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, On Early Marriages.

Virtue and Happiness are Mother and Daughter.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1746.

⁵ Shall ignorance of good and ill

Dare to direct the eternal will?

Seek virtue, and, of that possess,

To Providence resign the rest.

JOHN GAY, Fables: The Father and Jupiter.

⁶ You wish to live rightly (and who does not?);
 since Virtue alone can achieve this, boldly drop trifles and scorn delights.

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 6, l. 29.

Nor can you suppose that anyone is happy but the man who is wise and good. (Neve putes alium aspicite bonoque beatum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 16, l. 20.

And if the Wise be the happy man, as these sages say, he must be virtuous too; for without virtue happiness cannot be.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. xiv, p. 405.

⁷ Through virtue lies the one and only road to a life of peace. (Tranquillæ per virtutem patet unica viæ.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 364.

⁸ Mortals that would follow me,
 Love virtue; she alone is free;
 She can teach ye how to climb
 Higher than the spher'ry chime;
 Or if virtue feeble were;

Heav'n itself would stoop to her.

MILTON, Comus, l. 1018.

⁹ Virtue of herself is sufficient for happiness.

PLATO. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Plato. Bk. iii, l. 13.)

¹⁰ Virtue may choose the high or low degree,
 'T is just alike to Virtue and to me;

Dwell in a monk, or light upon a king,
 She's still the same belov'd, contented thing.

Pope, Epilogue to the Satires. Dial. i, l. 137.

What nothing earthly gives or can destroy,
 The soul's calm sunshine and the heartfelt joy,
 Is Virtue's prize.

Pope, Essay on Man. Epis. iv, l. 167.

Know then this truth (enough for man to know),
 "Virtue alone is happiness below."

Pope, Essay on Man. Epis. iv, l. 309.

¹⁴ He who dies for virtue does not perish. (Qui per virtutem perit, at non interit.)

PLAUTUS, Captivi, l. 690. (Act iii, sc. 5.)

For virtue will endure to posterity; envy will not reach them. (Ad posteros enim virtus durabit non perveniet invidia.)

QUINTILIAN, De Institutionibus Oratoria. Bk. iii,
 ch. 1.

¹⁵ The renown which riches or beauty confer is fleeting and frail; virtue remains bright and eternal. (Divitiarum et formæ gloria fluxa atque fragile est; virtus clara æternaque habetur.)

SALLUST, Catiline. Ch. i, sec. 4.

¹⁶ Virtue lives beyond the grave. (Vivit post funera virtus.)

TIBERIUS CÆSAR. (BORBORETUS, Lives: Tiberius.)

Virtue shall live even after the funeral.

(Vivet etiam post funera virtus.)

Old Testament: Joel, ii, 28; Acts, ii, 17.

The people's prayer, the glad diviner's theme,
The young men's vision, and the old men's dream!
Dryden, Abraham and Achitophel. Pt. 1, l. 238.

Thy wife hath dream'd, thy mother hath seen visions.
SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, v, 3, 63.

⁴
Was it a vision, or a waking dream?
Fled is that music:—do I wake or sleep?
KEATS, Ode to a Nightingale. St. 3.

True to a vision, steadfast to a dream.
STEPHEN PHILLIPS, Ulysses. Act i, sc. 1.

⁵
Ah splendid Vision, golden time,
An end of hunger, cold, and crime,
An end of rent, an end of rank,
An end of balance at the bank!
ANDREW LANG, The New Millennium.

⁶
It is a dream, sweet child! a waking dream,
A blissful certainty, a vision bright,
Of that rare happiness, which even on earth
Heaven gives to those it loves.

LONGFELLOW, Spanish Student. Act iii, sc. 5.

⁷
I took it for a faëry vision
Of some gay creatures of the element
That in the colours of the rainbow live
And play i' th' plighted clouds.
MILTON, Comus, l. 298.

⁸
My thoughts by night are often filled
With visions false as fair:
For in the past alone I build
My castles in the air.
THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK, Castles in the Air.

Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The air-built castle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantic wish, the chemist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame.

Pope, Dunciad. Bk. iii, l. 9.
See also under CASTLE.

⁹
Where there is no vision, the people perish.
Old Testament: Proverbs, xxix, 18.

¹⁰
'T was but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
Which the brain makes of fumes: our very eyes
Are sometimes like our judgements, blind.
SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 300.

Alas! How is 't with you,
That you do bend your eye on vacancy
And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?
SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 116.

¹¹
Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 33.

The air-drawn dagger.
SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 62.

¹²
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits and
Are melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,

The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.
SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest. Act iv, sc. 1, l. 148.
(1611)

The cloud cap'd Towers
The Gorgeous Palaces,
The Solemn Temples,
The Great Globe itself,
Yea all which it Inherit,
Shall dissolve

And like the baseless Fabric of a Vision
Leave not a wreck behind.
Inscription, on tablet in the left hand of the statue of Shakespeare in Westminster Abbey.

Those golden palaces, those gorgeous halls,
With furniture superfluously fair;
Those stately courts, those sky-encount'ring walls
Evanish all—like vapours in the air.
SIR WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Illusion. (1615)

¹³
What stately vision mocks my waking sense?
Hence, dear delusion, sweet enchantment,
hence!

HORACE AND JAMES SMITH, An Address Wink-out a Phantasm, l. 1.

Ah me! the vision has vanished,
The music has died away.
WILLIAM WETMORE STORR, Cleopatra.

¹⁴
Vision is the art of seeing things invisible.
SWIFT, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

¹⁵
Perfect blessedness, which consists in a vision of God. (Beatitudinem perfectam, quæ in Dei visione consistit.)

St. THOMAS AQUINAS, Summa Theologicæ.
Hence "beatific vision."

But Shapes, that come not at an earthly call,
Will not depart when mortal voices bid;
Lords of the visionary eye whose lid,
Once raised, remains aghast, and will not fall!
WORDSWORTH, Dion, St. 5.

To whom, in vision clear,
The aspiring heads of future things appear,
Like mountain-tops whose mists have rolled away.

WORDSWORTH, Poems Dedicated to National Independence, Pt. II, No. 43.

A still small voice spake unto me.

TENNYSON, The Two Voices, l. 1.

The living voice moves. (Viva vox adficit.)

PLINY, Epistles, Bk. II, epi. 3. Meaning that what they hear affects men more deeply than what they read.

The spoken voice perishes; the written word remains. (Vox auditæ perit, littera scripta manet.)

WILLIAM CAXTON, Quoted.

All voice and nothing else. (ἄφωκός ἐστις ἄλλου καὶ οὐδὲν ἄλλο.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Laconic Apophthegms, Sec.
233A. The context is, "A man plucked a slightingale and finding almost no meat, said,
'It's all voice you are, and nothing else.'
The Latin is, "Vox et præterea nihil."

The voice is nothing but beaten air. (Vox nihil aliud quam ictus aer.)

SENECA, Naturales Questiones, Bk. II, sec. 29.

My voice stuck in my throat. (Vox faucibus hæsit.)

II—Voice: Good and Bad

The thrilling, solemn, proud, pathetic voice.
E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. ix, l. 196.

The thrilling, tender, proud, pathetic voice.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. ix, l. 206.

The thrilling, solemn voice, so passionless.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. ix, l. 248.

Quiet, priestlike voice,

Too used to syllable damnations round

To make a natural emphasis worth while.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. iv, l. 633.

I am sad-voiced as the turtle

Which Anacreon used to feed.

E. B. BROWNING, Wine of Cyprus, St. 6.

His voice in one dull, deep, unvaried sound,
Seems to break forth from caverns underground.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Rosciad, l. 567.

His voice no touch of harmony admits,

Irregularly deep, and shrill by fits.

The two extremes appear like man and wife,

Coupled together for the sake of strife.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Rosciad, l. 1003.

Let me hear

Thy voice—my own affrights me with its echoes.

CONGRUVE, The Mourning Bride, Act II, sc. 1.

His voice is soft as is the upper air,

Or dying lovers' words.

DRYDEN, The Rival Ladies, Act I, sc. 3.

At some glad moment was it nature's choice
To dower a scrap of sunset with a voice?

EDGAR FAWCETT, To an Oriole.

I love to hear thine earnest voice,
Wherever thou art hid.

O. W. HOLMES, To an Insect.

When from his breast his mighty voice went forth. ('ΑΑ' δρε δὴ δνα νε μεγαλὴν ἐκ στήθεσσι etc.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. iii, l. 221.

1 He ceas'd; but left so pleasing on the ear
His voice, that list'ning still they seemed to hear.

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xiii, l. 1. (Pope, tr.)

The voice so sweet, the words so fair,
As some soft chime had stroked the air;
And though the sound were parted thence,
Still left an echo in the sense.

BEN JONSON, Eupheme. Pt. iv, st. 10.

The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice, that he a while Thought him still speaking, still stood fix'd to hear.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. viii, l. 1.

He ceased; but still their trembling ears retained
The deep vibrations of his witching song.

Are gone, nor leave a single trace behind.

ROBERT LLOYD, The Actor.

I am listening for the voices
Which I heard in days of old.

CAROLINE NORTON, The Lonely Harp.

But O for the touch of a vanish'd hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!

TENNYSON, Break, Break, Break, l. 11.

3 The melting voice through mazes running,
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony.

MILTON, L'Allegro, l. 142.

That voice . . . heard so oft
In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge
Of battle.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. i, l. 274.

4 His voice as the sound of many waters.
New Testament: Revelation, i, 15.

His voice was propertied
As all the tuned spheres.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act v,
sc. 2, l. 83.

5 I thank you for your voices: thank you:
Your most sweet voices.

SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 179.

6 For my voice, I have lost it with halloing and singing of anthems.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act i, sc. 2, l. 212.

7 I'll speak in a monstrous little voice.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.
Act i, sc. 2, l. 54.

I will aggravate my voice so that I will roar

you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you as I were any nightingale.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.
Act i, sc. 2, l. 85.

8 O, good my lord, tax not so bad a voice
To slander music any more than once.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act
ii, sc. 3, l. 46.

9 With a voice that, like a bell
Toll'd by an earthquake in a trembling tower,
Rang ruin.

11 A clear sonorous voice, inaudible
To the vast multitude.

WORDSWORTH, The Excursion. Bk. ix, l. 89.

A voice so thrilling ne'er was heard
In spring-time from the Cuckoo-bird,
Breaking the silence of the seas
Among the farthest Hebrides.

WORDSWORTH, The Solitary Reaper, l. 13.

12 Two voices are there; one is of the sea,
One of the mountains; each a mighty Voice,
In both from age to age thou didst rejoice,
They were thy chosen music, Liberty!

WORDSWORTH, Poems Dedicated to National
Independence. Pt. i, No. 12.

III—Voice in Women

13 Her voice changed like a bird's:
There grew more of the music and less of the words.

ROBERT BROWNING, The Flight of the Duchess.
St. 15.

And her voice was the warble of a bird,
So soft, so sweet, so delicately clear,
That finer, simpler music ne'er was heard;

The sort of sound we echo with a tear,
Without knowing why—an overpowering tone,
Whence melody descends, as from a throne.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 151.

14 The devil hath not, in all his quiver's choice,
An arrow for the heart like a sweet voice.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xv, st. 13.

For it stirs the blood in an old man's heart,
And makes his pulses fly,
To catch the thrill of a happy voice,
And the light of a pleasant eye.

N. P. WILLIS, Saturday Afternoon.

15 Then read from the treasured volume
The poem of thy choice,

And lend to the rhyme of the poet
The beauty of thy voice.

LONGFELLOW, The Day Is Done. St. 28.

Oh, there is something in that voice that reaches
The innermost recesses of my spirit!
LONGFELLOW, *The Divine Tragedy: The First
Passover*. Pt. vi.

Thy voice is a celestial melody.
LONGFELLOW, Mask of Pandora. Pt. v, l. 2.

Her silver voice
Is the rich music of a summer bird,
Heard in the still night, with its passionate excuse.
LONGFELLOW, The Spirit of Poetry, l. 55.

How sweetly sounds the voice of a good woman!
It is so seldom heard, that, when it speaks,
It ravishes all senses.
MIDDLETON, The Old Law. Act iv, sc. 2.

Her voice, whate'er she said, enchanted;
Like music to the heart it went.
SAMUEL ROGERS, Jacqueline. Pt. i, l. 80.
Her voice was like the voice the stars
Had when they sang together.
D. G. ROSSINI, The Blessed Damosel. St. 10.

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act v, sc. 3, l. 272.

Silence, beautiful voice!
Be still, for you only trouble the mind
With a joy in which I cannot rejoice,
A glory I shall not find.
TENNYSON, Maud, l. 180.

VOLTAIRE

Voltaire and Shakespeare! He was all
The other feigned to be.
The flippant Frenchman speaks: I weep;
And Shakespeare weeps with me.
MATTHEW CLAUDIUS, A Comparison.

Built God a church, and laugh'd his word to scorn,
Skillful alike to seem devout and just,
And stab religion with a sly side-thrust.
COWPER, Restraint, l. 688.

Just knows, and knows no more, her Bible true—
A truth the brilliant Frenchman never knew.
COWPER, Truth, l. 328.

He is like the false Amphitryon; although a stranger, it is always he who has the air of being master of the house.

DRUM. (EMERSON, Quotation and Originality.)
Voltaire was an apostle of Christian ideas; only the names were hostile to him, and he never knew it otherwise. He was like the son of the vine-dresser in the Gospel, who said No, and went; the other said Yea, and went not.

EMERSON, Lectures and Biographical Sketches: Character.

Jesus wept: Voltaire smiled.
VICTOR HUGO, Address, centenary of Voltaire's death, 30 May, 1878.

Here lies the child spoiled by the world which he spoiled. (Ci gît l'enfant gâté du monde qu'il gâta.)

BARONNE DE MONTOLIEU, Epitaph on Voltaire.

Thou art so witty, profligate, and thin,
Thou seem'st a Milton with his Death and Sin.

EDWARD YOUNG, Epigram on Voltaire. Referring to Voltaire's severe criticism of Milton's allegorical description of Death and Sin.
(DORAN, Life of Young.)

VOTE AND VOTING

I consider biennial elections as a security that the sober, second thought of the people shall be law.

FISHER AMES, Speech, Jan., 1788.

It is hard in all causes, but especially in religion, when voices shall be numbered and not weighed.

FRANCIS BACON, Of Church Controversies.

Universal suffrage is the government of a house
by its nursery.

BISMARCK, Saying.

The notion that a man's liberty consists in giving his vote at election-hustings, and saying, "Behold, now, I too have my twentythousandth part of a Talker in our National Palaver."

THOMAS CARLYLE, Past and Present. Bk. iii,
ch. 13.

No method of voting can be better than that of open declaration. (Nihil ut fuerit in suffragiis voce melius.)

CICERO, De Legibus. Bk. iii, ch. 15, sec. 33.

We need the faith to go a path untrod,
The power to be alone and vote with God.
EDWIN MARKHAM, The Need of the Hour.

A straw vote only shows which way the hot air blows.

O. HENRY. (New American Literature, p. 170.)

The freeman casting, with unpurchased hand,
The vote that shakes the turrets of the land.
O. W. HOLMES, Poetry, a Metrical Essay, l. 83.

A weapon that comes down as still
As snowflakes fall upon the sod;
But executes a freeman's will,
As lightning does the will of God;
And from its force, nor doors nor locks
Can shield you; 'tis the ballot-box.

JOHN PILGRIM, A Word from a Petitioner.

I am not one to hunt for the votes of a fickle public at the cost of suppers and gifts of worn-out clothes. (Non ego ventose plebis suffragia venor Impensis cenarum et trite munere vestis.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epi. 19, l. 37.

The right of election is the very essence of the constitution.

JUNIUS, Letters. No. 11, 24 Apr., 1769.

Among free men there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (E. J. Young, The Lesson of the Hour: Magazine of History. No. 43.)

I go for all sharing the privileges of the government who assist in bearing its burdens. Consequently I go for admitting all whites to the right of suffrage who pay taxes or bear arms, by no means excluding females.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Letter, 1836.

Is virtue verily found in voices?

Or is wisdom won when all win votes?

SWINBURNE, A Word from the Psalmist. St. 3.

Is a vote a coat? will franchise feed you,
Or words be a roof against the rain?

SWINBURNE, A Word from the Psalmist. St. 4.

All forward-looking minds know that, sooner or later, the chief public question in this country will be woman's claim to the ballot.

THEODORE TILTON. (Independent, 18 Jan., 1866.)

As long as I count the votes, what are you going to do about it?

WILLIAM MARCY TWEED, of the ballot in New York City, in November, 1871.

More men have been elected between Sundown and Sunup, than ever were elected between Sunup and Sundown.

WILL ROGERS, The Illiterate Digest, p. 152.

The votes of veering crowds are not
The things that are more excellent.

WILLIAM WATSON, Things That Are More Excellent.

Democracy's ceremonial, its feast, its great function, is the election.

H. G. WELLS, Democracy.

Your telegram received. I would feel deeply mortified to have you or anyone like you vote for me. Since you have access to many disloyal citizens and I have not, I will ask you to convey this message to them.

WOODROW WILSON. Answer to telegram from Jeremiah O'Leary, in campaign of 1916, threatening Wilson with the loss of pro-German votes.

Men's vows are women's traitors.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 56.

Ay, springs to catch woodcocks. I do know,
When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul
Lends the tongue vows.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act i, sc. 3, l. 115.

Vows were ever brokers to defiling.

SHAKESPEARE, A Lover's Complaint, l. 173.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act I, sc. 1, l. 175.

You put me off with limber vows.

II—Year: New Year

¹³ Thou art my single day, God lends to heaven
What were all earth else, with a feel of heaven.

BROWNING, Pippa Passes: Introduction, l. 39.

¹⁴ Even while we sing, he smiles his last,

And leaves our sphere behind.

The good Old Year is with the past,

O be the New as kind!

BRYANT, A Song for New-Year's Eve.

¹⁵ The merry year is born
Like the bright berry from the naked thorn.

HARTLEY COLERIDGE, New Year's Day.

¹⁶ A song for the Old, while its knell is tolled,

And its parting moments fly!

But a song and a cheer for the glad New Year,

While we watch the Old Year die!

Oh! its grief and pain ne'er can come again,

And its care lies buried deep;

But what joy untold doth the New Year hold,

And what hopes within it sleep!

GEORGE COOPER, This New Year.

¹⁷ Who comes dancing over the snow,

His soft little feet all bare and rosy?

Open the door, though the wild winds blow,

Take the child in and make him cosy.

Take him in and hold him dear,

He is the wonderful glad New Year.

DENAH MARIA MULLOCK CRAIK, The New Year.

New Year comes but once a twelvemonth.

W. E. HENLEY, In Hospital: Interlude.

For hark! the last chime of the dial has ceased,
And Old Time, who his leisure to cozen,
Has finish'd the Months, like the flasks at a feast,

Is preparing to tap a fresh dozen!
HOOD, Anacreontic for the New Year. St. 1.

And ye, who have met with Adversity's blast,
And been how'd to the earth by its fury;
To whom the Twelve Months, that have recently pass'd

Were as harsh as a prejudiced jury—
Still, all to the Future! and join in our chime,
The regrets of remembrance to cozen,
And having obtained a New Trial of Time,
Shout in hopes of a kindlier dozen.

HOOD, Anacreontic for the New Year. St. 3.

Sad, sad to think that the year is all but done.

CHARLES KINGSLEY, The Starlings.

Then sing, young hearts that are full of cheer,
With never a thought of sorrow;
The old goes out, but the glad young year
Comes merrily in to-morrow.

EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER, New Year Song.

Gone! gone forever!—like a rushing wave
Another year has burst upon the shore
Of earthly being—and its last low tones,
Wandering in broken accents in the air,
Are dying to an echo.

GEORGE D. PRENTICE, Flight of Years.

Like yonder stars so bright and clear
That praise their Maker as they move,
And usher in the circling year.

SCHILLER, Song of the Bell. (Bowring, tr.)

"Orphan Hours, the Year is dead:
Come and sigh, come and weep."

"Merry Hours, smile instead,
For the Year is but asleep.
See, it smiles as it is sleeping,
Mocking your untimely weeping."

SHELLEY, Dirge for the Year.

The warm sun is failing, the bleak wind is wailing,
The bare boughs are sighing, the pale flowers are dying;

And the year
On the earth her deathbed, in a shroud of leaves dead,
Is lying.

Come, months, come away,
From November to May,
In your saddest array;
Follow the bier

Of the dead cold year,
And like dim shadows watch by her sepulchre.
SHELLEY, Autumn, A Dirge.

Full knee-deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are wearily sighing:
Toll ye the church-bell sad and slow,
And tread softly and speak low,
For the old year lies a-dying. . . .

There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend,
A new face at the door.

TENNYSON, The Death of the Old Year.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light:

The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

TENNYSON, In Memoriam. Pt. cvi, st. 1.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow:
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

ALFRED TENNYSON, In Memoriam. Pt. cvi, st. 2.

A spirit haunts the year's last hours
Dwelling amid these yellowing bowers.

TENNYSON, Song.

I—Youth: Definitions

² A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time; but that happeneth rarely.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.

Young men are fitter to invent than to judge; fitter for execution than for counsel; and fitter for new projects than for settled business.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, stir more than they can quiet, fly to the end without consideration of the means.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.

³ Youth being indeed the philosopher's rasa tabula, is apt to receive any impressure.

RICHARD BRATHWAITE, English Gentleman, 3, (1630)

⁴ Every street has two sides, the shady side and the sunny. When two men shake hands and part, mark which of the two takes the sunny side; he will be the younger man of the two.

BUTLER-LYTTON, What Will He Do With It? Bk. II, ch. 15.

⁵ Youth is to all the glad season of life; but often only by what it hopes, not by what it attains, or what it escapes.

CARLYLE, Essays: Schöler.

⁶ The young leading the young, is like the blind leading the blind; they will both fall into the ditch.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 6 Nov., 1747.

Young men are apt to think themselves wise enough, as drunken men are apt to think themselves sober enough.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 15 Jan., 1753.

⁷ The best recommendation that a young man can have is modesty, filial affection, and devotion to kindred. (Prima igitur commendatio preficitur a modestia cum pietate inparentes, in suavis benivolentia.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. II, ch. 13, sec. 46.

⁸ Young heads are giddy, and young hearts are warm,

And make mistakes for manhood to reform.
Boys are, at best, but pretty buds unblown,

Whose scent and hues are rather guess'd than known;

Each dreams that each is just what he appears,

But learns his error in maturer years,

When disposition, like a sail unfur'd,

Shows all its rents and patches to the world.

COWPER, Tirocinium, l. 444.

⁹ Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;

We may our ends by our beginnings know.

SIR JOHN DENHAM, On Prudence, l. 225.

¹⁰ The Youth of a Nation are the trustees of Posterity.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Sybil. Bk. vi, ch. 13.

¹¹ "And youth is cruel, and has no remorse

And smiles at situations which it cannot see."

I smile, of course,

And go on drinking tea.

T. S. ELIOT, Portrait of a Lady.

¹² Say, was it never heard
That wisdom might in youth be gotten,

Or wit be ripe before 'twas rotten?

EMERSON, Fame.

¹³ There is a feeling of Eternity in youth which makes us amends for everything. To be young is to be as one of the Immortals.

WILLIAM HALLITT, Table Talk: The Feeling of Immortality in Youth.

¹⁴ Youth is a continual intoxication; it is the fever of reason. (La jeunesse est une ivresse continue; c'est la fièvre de la raison.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 271.

¹⁵ Youth sees too far to see how near it is
To seeing farther.

E. A. ROBINSON, Tristram.

¹⁶ Our youth is like a rustic at the play
That cries aloud in simple-hearted fear,

Curses the villain, shudders at the fray,

And weeps before the maiden's wreathed bier

GEORGE SANTAYANA, The Rustic at the Play.

¹⁷ Youth is wholly experimental.

R. L. STEVENSON, A Letter to a Young Gentleman.

Youth is the time to go flashing from one end of the world to the other both in mind and body; to try the manners of different nations; to hear the chimes at midnight.

R. L. STEVENSON, Virginibus Puerisque: Crabbed Age and Youth.

¹⁸ Youth is not a time of life; it is a state of mind.

SAMUEL ULLMAN, From the Sonnets of Forty-Six Years.

AMY LOWELL, Tendencies in Modern American Poetry, p. 60.
- ¹⁴ The atrocious crime of being a young man, which the honourable gentleman has, with such spirit and decency, charged upon me, I shall neither attempt to palliate nor deny; but content myself with wishing that I may be one of those whose follies cease with their youth, and not of those who continue ignorant in spite of age and experience
WILLIAM PITT, Speech, 6 March, 1741, in reply to Walpole, the "honourable gentleman" referred to. Boswell, in his Life (1741), alleges that this speech was written by Dr. Johnson.

If youth be a defect, it is one that we outgrow only too soon.

J. R. LOWELL, Address, Cambridge, Mass., 8 Nov., 1886.

1
I confess to pride in this coming generation. You are working out your own salvation; you are more in love with life; you play with fire openly, where we did in secret, and few of you are burned!

My salad days
When I was green in judgement: cold in blood.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, i, 3, 73.

How green you are and fresh in this old world.

SHAKESPEARE, King John, Act iii, sc. 4, l. 145.

The text is old, the orator too green.

SHAKESPEARE, Venus and Adonis, l. 806.

"He is so jolly green," said Charley.

DICKENS, Oliver Twist, Ch. 9.

Fresh as an angel o'er a new inn-door.

BYRON, Beppo, St. 57.

3
He wears the rose Of youth upon him.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, iii, 13, 20.

We have some salt of our youth in us

SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii, 3, 50.

'Tis now the summer of your youth

Time has not crop'd the roses from your cheek,

Though sorrow bug has washed them.

EDWARD MOORE, The Gamester, Act iii, sc. 4.

4
For though the canonic, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted the sooner it wears

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV, Act ii, sc. 4, l. 440.

The May of life blooms once and never again
(Des Lebens Mai blüht einmal und nicht wieder.)

SCHILLER, Resignation, St. 2.

He that is more than a youth is not for me, and he that is less than man, I am not for him.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, ii, l. 40.

7
He has quitted the hobbledehoy stage; he is out of his teens (Excessit ex ephebis.)

TERENCE, Andria, l. 51. (Act i, sc. 1.)

Their hobbledehoy time, the years that one is neither a man nor a boy.

JOHN PALSGRAVE, Acolastus, D 4. (1540)

The first seven years bring up as a child,

The next to learning, for wailing too wild,

The next keep under sir hobbard de boy,

The next a man, no longer a boy.

THOMAS TUSSEY, Hundred Good Points of Husbandry. (1573)

I was between

A man and a boy, a hoble-de-hoy,

A fat, little, punchy concern of sixteen.

R. H. BARHAM, Aunt Fanny.

Hobbledehoy, neither man nor boy,
With a burden of pain and a purpose of joy,
With a heart and a hunger of human alloy,
He's a lad whom the jungle and heaven decoy.
There's a god and a devil in Hobbledehoy!

WITTIER BYNNER, Hobbledehoy.

Bring but a moonish youth.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, Act iii, sc. 2, l. 430.

Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peas-cod, or a codling when 'tis almost an apple: 'tis with him in standing water, between boy and man. He is very well-favoured and he speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night, Act i, sc. 5, l. 165.

The imagination of a boy is healthy, and the mature imagination of a man is healthy; but there is a space of life between, in which the soul is in a ferment, the character undecided, the way of life uncertain, the ambition thick-sighted: thence proceeds awkwardness.

KEATS, Endymion: Preface.

8
The wildest colts make the best horses.

THEMISTOCLES. (PIUTARCH, Lives: Themistocles, Ch. 2, sec. 5.)

For young hot colts being rag'd, do rage the more.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II, Act ii, sc. 1, l. 70.

A man whose youth has no follies, will in his maturity have no power.

MONTIMER COLLINS, Thoughts in My Garden, ii, 108.

For God's sake give me the young man who has brains enough to make a fool of himself.

R. L. STEVENSON, Crabbed Age and Youth.

And still my delight is in proper young men.

BURNS, The Jolly Beggars.

9
My prime of youth is but a frost of cares.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. ii, l. 13.

- 1
O enviable, early days,
When dancing thoughtless pleasure's maze,
To care, to guilt unknown!
How ill exchange'd for riper times,
To feel the follies or the crimes,
Of others, or my own!
BURNS, Despondency. St. 5.
- O Life! how pleasant is thy morning,
Young Fancy's rays the hills adorning!
Cold-pausing Caution's lesson scorning,
We frisk away,
Like schoolboys at th' expected warning,
To joy an' play.
BURNS, Epistle to James Smith. St. 15.
- Oh, talk not to me of a name great in story;

Your women shall scream like peacocks when they talk and your men neigh like horses when they laugh. You shall call 'round' 'raound,' and 'very' 'varry,' and 'news' 'noose' till the end of time. You shall be governed by the Irishman and the German, the vendors of drinks and the keepers of vile dens, that your streets may be filthy in your midst and your sewage arrangements filthier.

These letters were afterwards collected and published in a volume called From Sea to Sea, but the sentences above, which have been called "Kipling's seven-fold curse on America," were omitted. They were written in resentment at the pirating of his books by American publishers. (See The Bookman, vol. ix, p. 429.)

² 203:7
I chanced upon a new book yesterday:
I opened it, and, where my finger lay
"Twixt page and uncut page, these words I read

—Some six or seven at most—and learned thereby

That you, Fitzgerald, whom by ear and eye
She never knew, "thanked God my wife was dead."

Ay, dead! and were yourself alive, good Fitz,

How to return you thanks would tax my wits:

Kicking you seems the lot of common curs—
While more appropriate greeting lends you grace:

Surly to spit there glorifies your face—
Spitting—from lips once sanctified by Hers.

ROBERT BROWNING, To Edward Fitzgerald. (The Athenaeum, 13 July, 1889.)

Mrs. Browning's death is rather a relief to me, I must say. No more Aurora Leighs, thank God! A woman of real genius, I know; but what is the upshot of it all? She and her sex had better mind the kitchen and the children; and perhaps the poor. Except in such things as little novels, they only devote themselves to what men do much better, leaving that which men do worse or not at all.

³ 300:20
If every man's internal care
Were written on his brow,
How many would our pity share
Who have our envy now!

The fatal secret, when reveal'd,
Of every aching breast,
Would prove that only while conceal'd
Their lot appeared the best.

(Se a ciascun l'interno affanno
Si leggesse in fronte scritto,
Quanti mai, che invidia fanno,
Ci farebbero pietà!)

Si vedria che i lor nemici
Anno in seno; e si riduce
Nel parere a noi felici
Ogni lor felicità.

PIETRO METASTASIO, Giuseppe Riconosciuto. Pt. i. (Opere, vol. vii, p. 266. Paris, 1780)

If mental sufferings we could read
Inscribed with truth upon each brow,
With pity then our hearts would bleed,
For those whom most we envy now!

METASTASIO. (CHARLES BURNLEY, tr., Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Abate Metastasio. Vol. i, p. 354. 1796)

If all was written on the brow,
Which inwardly gives pain,
How many who are envied now
Compassion would obtain!

For oft, concealed within the breast,
They lodge their deadliest foe;
And being thought by others blest
Is all the bliss they know.

METASTASIO. (JAMES GLASFORD, tr., Select Acts from Metastasio. In his Miscellanea, p. 53. 1818)

Did every outward feature show
The inward pangs of secret woe,
How oft would those our pity know,
That now our envy move.

'Twould then be seen, in many a breast,
What cruel foes their peace molest;
And those, who seem to us so blest,
As wretched then would prove.

METASTASIO. (JOHN HOOLE, tr., Dramas and Other Poems of the Abate Pietro Metastasio: The Discovery of Joseph. Pt. i, iii, 374. 1800)

If each man's secret, unguessed care
Were written on his brow,
How many would our pity share
Who have our envy now!

And if the promptings of each heart
No artifice concealed,
How many trusting friends would part
At what they saw revealed.

The more it changes, the more it's the same thing. (Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose.)

ALPHONSE KARR, Les Guêpes; Les Femmes, Jan., 1849. (Edition Levy, vol. vi, p. 304.) In 1875, Karr used this phrase for the title of two volumes of articles dealing with the events of 1871. The first volume was called "Plus ça change," and the second, "Plus c'est la même chose."

Of all that I have written, stories, plays, history, criticism, fantasia, verse and prose, if I have the rare and happy fortune to be survived by anything, it will be by two little phrases, three lines in all, very light baggage.

... One is the résumé of my political studies—of what I have read and what I have seen—written in 1848: "The more it changes, the more it's the same thing." The other is older; it may be found in the Guêpes of 1840: "Let us abolish the death penalty—but let the assassins begin." (De tout ce que j'ai écrit, romans, pièces de théâtre, histoire, critique, fantasia, vers et prose, etc., si j'ai cette rare et heureuse chance que quelque chose me survive, ce sera deux petites phrases composant trois lignes à elles deux, bagage bien léger. . . . L'une est un résumé de mes études politiques—de ce que j'ai lu et de ce que j'ai vu—je l'ai écrite en 1848: "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose." L'autre est plus ancienne; on la trouverait dans les Guêpes de 1840: "Abolissons la peine de mort, mais que messieurs les assassins commencent." (Begin: i.e. "do it first.")

³ 467:10
I do solemnly swear by that which I hold most sacred:

That I will be loyal to the profession of medicine and just and generous to its members;
That I will lead my life and practise my art in uprightness and honor;

That into whatsoever house I shall enter, it shall be for the good of the sick to the utmost of my power, I holding myself aloof from wrong, from corruption, and from the tempting of others to vice;

That I will exercise my art solely for the cure of my patients, and will give no drug, perform no operation for a criminal purpose, even if solicited, far less suggest it;

That whatsoever I shall see or hear of the lives of men which is not fitting to be spoken, I will keep inviolably secret.

These things I do promise, and in proportion as I am faithful to this my oath may happiness and good repute be ever mine—the opposite if I shall be forsworn.

The Hippocratic Oath. This oath, which probably originated with Hippocrates, about 400 B.C., and which certainly embodies the ideals of medical ethics for which he stood, has been subject to many revisions. The version given above is that made by the late Professor John G. Curtis, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and is a fairly close paraphrase of the Greek. In this form it is administered at each commencement to the candidates for the degree of Doctor of Medicine at Columbia, Cornell, and other universities. For modern version see p. 2298g:5.

⁴ 801:10
One evening in October,
When I was far from sober,
And dragging home a load with manly pride,
My feet began to stutter,
So I laid down in the gutter,
And a pig came up and parked right by my side.

Then I warbled, "It 's fair weather
When good fellows get together,"
Till a lady passing by was heard to say:
"You can tell a man who boozes
By the company he chooses."

Then the pig got up and slowly walked away.
BENJAMIN H. BURT. (DE WOLF HOFFMAN, Once a Clown, Always a Clown, p. 237.)

⁵ 801:13
We know no spectacle so ridiculous as the British public in one of its periodical fits of morality. In general, elopements, divorces, and family quarrels, pass with little notice. We read the scandal, talk about it for a day, and forget it. But once in six or seven years our virtue becomes outrageous. We cannot suffer the laws of religion and decency to be violated. We must make a stand against vice. We must teach libertines that the English people appreciate the importance of domestic ties. Accordingly some unfortunate man, in no respect more depraved than hundreds whose offences have been treated with lenity, is singled out as an expiatory sacrifice. If he has children, they are to be taken from him. If he has a profession, he is to be driven from it. He is cut by the higher orders, and hissed by the lower. He is, in truth, a sort of whipping-boy, by whose vicarious agonies all the other transgressors of the same class are, it is supposed, sufficiently chastised. We reflect very complacently on our own severity, and compare with great pride the high standard of morals established in England with the Parisian laxity. At length our anger is satiated. Our victim is ruined and heart-broken. And our virtue goes quietly to sleep for seven years more.

MACAULAY, Essays: Moore's Life of Lord Byron. Paragraph 8.

1 630:18
If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse-trap than his neighbor, though he builds his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door.

EMERSON. (Borrowings, p. 38, 1889) Since the discussion of the authorship of this quotation which appears on page 630 was written, a mass of new material has come into the hands of the compiler, but none of it invalidates, or even weakens, the opinion previously set forth, that the sentence is from a lecture delivered by Ralph Waldo Emerson at San Francisco or Oakland, California, in the spring of 1871. There is some reason to believe that it is from the lecture on "Chivalry," delivered May 17th at San Francisco, for Mr. James Bradley Thayer (A Western Journey With Mr. Emerson, p. 121) describes it as "extemporized from certain fragments, [he] having failed to find one of his best lectures that had been brought along, but lay hidden somewhere in his trunk." An interesting detail is the recent discovery in The Saturday Evening Post for 20 March, 1882, of an abstract of Emerson's lecture on "Wealth," in which occurs the following: "Every man must be bought at his own price in his own place. Lawyers agree that if a man understand the law he may open his office in a pine barrel, and the people will come to him when they want law." This points straight at the "mouse-trap" three years earlier than the famous entry in the Journals quoted on page 630.

There is nothing resembling it, however, in the lecture on "Wealth" as printed in his works. Mr. David C. Mearns, of the Library of Congress, has pointed out the amusing coincidence that Jay Gould, in his youth, was the inventor of a mouse-trap, and that in later years he was the most distinguished member of the New York church of the Rev. John R. Paxton, whose friends have claimed that he, and not Emerson, was the author of the quotation. Nothing has been discovered to substantiate this claim; and further examination also confirms the flimsiness of Elbert Hubbard's case. It is perhaps enough to point out that Hubbard's first published writing appeared in 1893 (see the article on Hubbard in the Dictionary of American Biography), while the "mouse-trap" appeared in 1889. For a discussion of the evidence in detail, see STAVENSON, Famous Single Poems, revised (1935) edition, pp. 343-381.

He dwelt with the tribes of the marsh and moor,

He sate at the board of kings;
He tasted the toil of the burdened slave
And the joy that triumph brings.
But whether to jungle or palace hall
Or white-walled tent he came,
He was brother to king and soldier and slave,
His welcome was the same.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, Eulogy on Theodore Roosevelt, 9 Feb., 1919. The assumption has been that this stanza was quoted from a poem by some unknown author, but intensive search has failed to discover it, and it seems probable that it was original with Senator Lodge.

2 630:19
In the life of a successful farmer . . . the year flows on harmoniously, fortunately: through ploughing, seed-time, growth of grain, the yellowing of it beneath meek autumn suns and big autumn moons, the cutting of it down, riotous harvest-home, final sale, and large balance at the banker's. From the point of view of almost unvarying success, the farmer's life becomes beautiful, poetic. Everything is an aid and a help to him. Nature puts her shoulder to his wheel. He takes the winds, the clouds, the sunbeams, the rolling stars into partnership, and, asking no dividend, they let him retain the entire profits.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp: Men of Letters.

3 673:17
I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all. (Originally, "my flag.")

JAMES B. UPHAM AND FRANCIS BEECHER, Pledge to the Flag. On 21 July, 1892, President Benjamin Harrison, in obedience to an act of Congress, issued a proclamation recommending that October 31, the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, be celebrated everywhere by suitable exercises in the schools. The National Convention of Superintendents of Education appointed a committee to conduct the entire movement, and the chairman of this committee was Francis Bellamy, representing The Youth's Companion, a juvenile weekly published at Boston, Mass., which had taken a leading part in promoting the celebration. Under his direction the program was prepared, including the Pledge to the Flag, which was first published in The Youth's Companion 8 Sept., 1892 (vol. lv, no. 36, p. 446). In its issue for 20 Dec., 1917 (vol. xci, no. 51, p. 722), the Companion printed a short account of how the pledge came to be written, stating that "in 1888 the late James B. Upham, then a member of the Perry Mason Company (publishers of The Youth's Companion), began the great work of rousing public opinion . . . to the opportunity of fostering patriotism by putting the Stars and Stripes over every schoolhouse in the United States. . . . Mr. Upham had already written a form of pledge very much like that which is now so well known, and with the help of other members of the firm and of members of the editorial staff the present and final form was written." This indicates that Mr. Upham was the author of the first draft of the pledge, and that Mr. Bellamy assisted in putting it into its final shape.

I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

Attributed to VOLTAIRE, by S. G. Tallentyre (E. Beatrice Hall), an English writer, in her book The Friends of Voltaire (p. 199), published in England in 1906. The sentence was enclosed in quotation marks, and was supposed to have been written in a letter to Claude Adrien Helvétius, referring to his book, De l'Esprit, which Voltaire greatly admired. The quotation was so striking that it was widely quoted, but an exhaustive search through Voltaire's letters to Helvétius failed to disclose it, and finally Miss Tallentyre was asked where it could be found. In a letter to Mr. Harry Weinberger, of New York City, dated 20 July, 1935, she says: "I believe I did use the phrase as a description of Voltaire's attitude on Helvétius' book On the Mind. I did not intend to imply that Voltaire used these words verbatim, and should be surprised if they are found in any of his works. They are rather a paraphrase of Voltaire's words in the Essay on Tolerance, 'Think for yourselves, and let others enjoy the privilege to do so too.'" Of course Miss Tallentyre's sentence is not in any way a paraphrase of this one, but it may very fairly be held to paraphrase a passage in Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary referring to Helvétius:

I liked the author of De l'Esprit. . . . But I have never approved either the errors of his book, or the trivial truths which he so emphatically unfolded. I have, however, boldly taken his part when absurd men have condemned him for these very truths. (J'ai aimé l'auteur du livre De l'Esprit. . . . Mais je n'ai jamais approuvé ni les erreurs de son livre, ni les vérités triviales qu'il débite avec emphase. J'ai pris son parti hautement quand des hommes absurdes l'ont condamné pour ces vérités mêmes.)

3 God walks among the pots and pipkins.

SAINT TERESA.

Lord of the pots and pipkins, since I have no time to be

A saint by doing lovely things and vigiling with Thee,

By watching in the twilight dawn, and storming Heaven's gates,

Make me a saint by getting meals, and washing up the plates!

CECILY HALLACK, Divine Office of the Kitchen.

The title is followed by the line, "God walks among the pots and pipkins.—Saint Teresa." The poem was composed, so Miss Hallack states, as a message to a girl friend who complained that domestic drudgery was spoiling her hands for violin playing. In some way this got twisted in the head of Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, the famous London preacher, and at a service in Westminster Chapel in the summer of 1928, he read the poem from the pulpit, announcing that it had been written by an English servant girl of nineteen. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Sr., heard of it and was so moved by this extraordinary plety that he had some copies of the poem printed under the title, Lord of All Pots and Pans, ascribing it to the aforesaid servant girl, and distributed them at Lakewood, N. J., on a Sunday early in April, 1929. The legend thus started still survives. (See Literary Digest, 2 March, 1929, p. 36.)

1091:24
4 We have an expression in New York, when we meet a very difficult problem—"You will have to get a Philadelphia lawyer to solve that." Few people know that there is a basis of truth in the expression, for in 1735, when no New York lawyer could be obtained to defend John Peter Zenger, accused of criminal libel, because his two lawyers, James Alexander and William Smith, having challenged the jurisdiction of the court, had already been disbarred, the friends of Zenger came to Philadelphia and obtained the services of Andrew Hamilton, then eighty years of age, to go to New York without fee, and defend the action in the face of a hostile court.

HARRY WEINBERGER, The Liberty of the Press. Address at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, 9 March, 1934.

The world has never had a good definition of the word liberty, and the American people, just now, are much in want of one. We all declare for liberty; but in using the same word we do not all mean the same thing. With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases with himself, and the product of his labor; while with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men, and the product of other men's labor. Here are two, not only different, but incompatible things, called by the same name, liberty. And it follows that each of the things is, by the respective parties, called by two different and incompatible names—liberty and tyranny.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Address, Baltimore, Md., 18 April, 1864.

² 1242:5
Like to the falling of a Star;
Or as the flights of Eagles are.

HENRY KING (?), Sic Vita. Bishop Henry King's authorship of these lines, which are given in full on page 1242, has often been challenged on the ground that his Poems, in which they occur, were not published until 1657, whereas they had already appeared in Francis Beaumont's Poems, published in 1640. Nevertheless, scholars are pretty generally of the opinion that they belong to King, whose verses, after the fashion of the time, were circulated in manuscript form for many years before they were collected and printed. (See Lawrence Mason's unpublished thesis on King, in the Yale University Memorial Library.) The verses were imitated by Francis Quarles, John Philpot, Simon Wastell, and many others, Dr. Mason having unearthed fifteen poems written on this model. Here are two of them:

Like to the Bubble in the brook,
Or in a glass much like a look, . . .
Even such is Man, who lives by breath;
Is here, now there: so life, and death.
UNKNOWN, Verses of Man's Mortality. (SPARKES, Crumbs of Comfort. 1628.) Sometimes attributed to Simon Wastell.

Like to the damask Rose you see,
Or like the Blossom on the tree,
Or like the dainty Flower of May,
Or like the Morning to the day,
Or like the Sun, or like the Shade,
Or like the Gourd that Jonas had;
Even such is Man whose thread is spun,
Drawn out and cut, and so is done.

The Rose withers, the Blossom blasteth,
The Flower fades, the Morning hasteth:

The Sun sets, the Shadow flies,
The Gourd consumes, and Man he dies.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Hos Ego Versiculos. (Argalus and Parthenia. 1629.) These lines had been printed anonymously in Sparkes' Crumbs of Comfort, in 1628, as the beginning of a poem of seventy-two lines. They have been attributed to Simon Wastell, but were claimed by Quarles.

There is, however, yet another piece attributed to King which has considerable interest both in itself and as illustrating a peculiarity of the time. There was still, on the one hand, a certain shyness in regard to the formal publication of poetry, and, on the other, the inveterate habit of handing about MS. copies of verses, with the result that ill-informed persons entered them in their albums, and piratical, or, at least, enterprising publishers issued them in collections, under different names. The instance at present referred to is the curious batch of similes for the shortness and instability of life sometimes entitled Sic Vita. . . . There can be no doubt that King was quite equal to composing . . . them; but his authorship is a question of less interest than the way in which the circumstances illustrate the manners and taste of the time.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY, Lesser Caroline Poets. (Cambridge History of English Literature, vol. vii, p. 94.)

[There is] detailed evidence to establish the overwhelming probability of Henry King's authorship, . . . as well as the reasonable probability of his priority in employing the stansak form involved. . . . The title may well have been taken from King's favorite Petronius, cap. 45: "sic vita truditur."

LAWRENCE MASON, English Poems of Henry King, p. 207, note.

What is not today, will be tomorrow: so we trudge through life. (Quod hodie non est, cras erit: sic vita truditur.)

PETRONIUS, Satyricon. Ch. 45. See 2021:11.

³ 1298:2
Vulgar of manner, overfed,
Overdressed and underbred;
Heartless, Godless, hell's delight,
Rude by day and lewd by night;
Bedwarfed the man, o'ergrown the brute,
Ruled by Jew and prostitute;
Purple-robed and pauper-clad,
Raving, rotting, money-mad;
A squirming herd in Mammon's mesh,
A wilderness of human flesh;
Crazed with avarice, lust and rum,
New York, thy name's Delirium.

BYRON R. NEWTON, Owed to New York. Claimed by Mr. Newton in the N. Y. Times Book Review, 26 April, 1925. He states that he wrote the lines in 1906 to be read at a dinner of the staff of the N. Y. Herald.

⁴ 1403:14
I vow to thee, my country—all earthly things
above—

Entire and whole and perfect, the service of my love,

The love that asks no questions: the love that stands the test,
That lays upon the altar the dearest and the best:
The love that never falters, the love that pays the price,
The love that makes undaunted the final sacrifice.

CAROL SPRING-RICK, I Vow to Thee, My Country.

1 1491:12
My grandad, viewing earth's worn cogs,
Said things were going to the dogs;
His grandad in his house of logs
Swore things were going to the dogs;
His grandad in the Flemish bogs
Vowed things were going to the dogs;
His grandad in his old skin togs
Said things were going to the dogs.
Well, there's one thing I have to state:
Those dogs have had a good long wait.

UNKNOWN, Going to the Dogs. Sometimes attributed to Dr. George B. Cutten, President of Colgate University, who writes to the compiler: "No matter how much I should like to claim the authorship, my Pilgrim conscience will not permit me to do so. I got the verses from my brother, who told me that he had got them from the Boston Post in the early part of the century."

2 1528:2
Another of Addison's favourite companions was Ambrose Philips, a good Whig and a middling poet, who had the honour of bringing into fashion a species of composition which had been called, after his name, Namby Pamby.

MACAULAY, Essays: Addison.

A lady of quality . . . sends her waiting gentlewoman to namby-pamby me.

MARIA EDGEWORTH, The Absentee. Ch. 16.

3 1646:1
For the present, if we glance into that Assembly-Hall of theirs, it will be found, as is natural, "most irregular." . . . Rudiments of Methods disclose themselves; rudiments of Parties. There is a Right Side (Côté Droit), a Left Side (Côté Gauche); sitting on M. le President's right hand, or on his left. The Côté Droit conservative; the Côté Gauche destructive.

CARLYLE, The French Revolution. Bk. vi, ch. 2. Referring to the French Constituent Assembly, of July, 1789. The Oxford Dictionary states that "left" was first applied to persons of "more advanced or innovating" views in 1837, which was the date of publication of Carlyle's history. "Right," as applied to conservatives, goes much farther back, to Shakespeare, in fact, for in Coriolanus, ii, 1, 26, Menenius, who a few lines farther on described himself as a "humorous patrician," one of the two tribunes, Sicinius and Brutus: "Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean by us o' the right-hand file?" and adds that the "right-hand file," that is, the conservatives, find them fools, "ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs."

Politics—Familiar Phrases

I know, sir, that it is the habit of some gentlemen to speak with censure or reproach of the politics of New York. . . . It may be, sir, that the politicians of New York are not as fastidious as some gentlemen are as to disclosing the principles on which they act. They boldly preach what they practice. When they are not contending for victory, they avow their intention of enjoying the fruits of it. . . . They see nothing wrong in the rule that to the victor belong the spoils of the enemy.

"Vote early and vote often," the advice openly displayed on the election banners in one of our northern cities.

W. P. MILLS, of South Carolina, Speech, House of Representatives, 31 March, 1858.

Mournfully I prophesy that the program of these sons of the wild jackass who now control the Senate will probably go forward to complete consummation.

GEORGE H. MOSES, Speech, at a dinner of New England manufacturers, Washington, D. C., 7 Nov., 1929, referring to the so-called insurgent Republicans in the U. S. Senate, Borah, Brookhart, Johnson, La Follette, Norris, Nye, Shipstead, and Wheeler. Mr. Moses was at that time Senator from New Hampshire, a rock-ribbed Republican, and was discussing the difficulty of getting any legislation for higher tariffs through the Senate, because of the coalition which the insurgent Republicans had formed with the Democratic members. He afterwards stated that he had adapted the phrase, "Sons of the wild jackass," from the Old Testament: Jeremiah, xiv, 6: "And the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons." Senator Simeon Fess, of Ohio, called the same group "pseudo-Republicans"; Charles Francis Adams, Secretary of the Treasury, referred to them as "hybrids"; James Francis Burke, of the White House patronage committee, branded them as "pigmies"; and Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, said they were "more dangerous than Communists." All of which publicity the "insurgents" greatly enjoyed. There was a stormy debate in the Senate over the Moses utterance on the following day, 8 Nov., 1929.

JAMES OTIS, referring to Faneuil Hall, Boston. (See WINSOR, Memorial History of Boston. Vol. II, p. 524.) For Webster's use of the phrase, see 64:5.

² Abstain from beans. (Ἀπέχεσθαι τῶν κνέμων.)

Pythagoras. (ARISTOTLE, On the Pythagoreans.) According to Aristotle, this Pythagorean rule had nothing to do with politics; beans were banished from the diet because they resembled the testicles. (See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Pythagoras, Bk. viii, sec. 34.) However, the same word was used for the lot by which officials at Athens were chosen. (ὁ κνέμων λαχών), and the phrase was given that meaning. Diogenes Laertius states that Pythagoras was captured and killed by some enemies pursuing him because he refused to cross a field of beans.

Abstain from beans. There be sundry interpretations of this symbol. But Plutarch and Cicero think beans to be forbidden of Pythagoras, because they be windy and do engender impure humours and for that cause provoke bodily lust. RICHARD TAVERNER, Proverbs. Fo. l'. (1539)

To abstain from beans, that is, not to meddle in civil affairs or business of the commonweal, for in old times the election of Magistrates was made by the pulling of beans.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues, p. 148. (1579)

I read a Latin proverb, 'A fabis abstineto,' (forbear beans); whereof some make a civil interpretation. 'Meddle not with the matters of state'; because aociently men cast in a bean when they gave their suffrages in public elections.

THOMAS FULLER, Worthies of England, II, 225. (1662)

³ The coalition of Bliffl and Black George—the combination, unheard of till then, of the puritan with the blackleg.

JOHN RANDOLPH OF ROANOKE, Speech, House of Representatives, 30 March, 1826. (Register of Debates, II, pt. i, 19 Cong., 1st session, col. 401.) Referring to the alliance of John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay. The result of this denunciation was a duel with Clay, fought on the Virginia side of the Potomac, 8 April, 1826. Clay's second shot pierced the skirt of Randolph's coat, but Randolph himself fired in the air. Bliffl and Black George are disreputable characters in Fielding's Tom Jones.

⁴ Prosperity will not be obtained from the Federal government. It will come, when it comes, from the grass roots, from where it always must come.

JAMES A. REED, formerly U. S. Senator from Missouri, Speech, after F. D. Roosevelt's nomination as Democratic candidate for President, 1 July, 1932, appealing for party harmony. Reed repudiated Roosevelt in 1935, and campaigned against him in 1936.

The real test of party strength is down close to the grass roots.

CALVIN COOLIDGE, Political Parties. (1934)

Grass roots convention.

The name adopted by a convention of Midwest Republicans, which met at Springfield, Ill., in June, 1935, to discuss ways of combating the New Deal. Said to have originated with John D. M. Hamilton, of Topeka, Kansas, who became manager of the ill-fated Landon campaign in 1936.

⁵ Our policy is "Nothing is no good."

WILL ROGERS, The Illiterate Digest.

⁶ The whole tendency over many years has been to view the interstate commerce clause in the light of present-day civilization, although it was written into the Constitution in the horse-and-buggy days of the eighteenth century.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, at a press conference at the White House, 31 May, 1935. He was commenting on the unanimous decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Schechter case, rendered a few days previously, in which the National Recovery Administration had been declared unconstitutional, and suggesting that the Constitution was antiquated and must be modernized. The N. R. A., which had adopted the Blue Eagle as its emblem, had in 1933-4 been the most spectacular activity of the Roosevelt administration in attempting to regulate all the business of the country by the use of codes and penalties, but the Supreme Court ended it abruptly by ruling unanimously that the Federal Government had no constitutional right to interfere with any business not engaged in interstate commerce. The phrase "horse-and-buggy days" was seized upon by the administration's critics as an apt characterization of the peaceful era to which the country should be happy to return. (The newspaper reports of Mr. Roosevelt's remarks vary somewhat. The one used here is from the New York Times, 1 June, 1935.)

⁷ I hope that your committee will not permit doubt as to constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, Letter, to Representative Samuel B. Hill, referring to the Guffey Coal Control Bill, which was being investigated by a House committee of which Mr. Hill was chairman, in July, 1935.

⁸ I am as strong as a bull moose and you can use me to the limit.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Letter to Mark Hanna, at opening of the campaign in 1900. (BISHOP, Theodore Roosevelt and His Times, Vol. I, p. 139.)

It takes more than that to kill a Bull Moose.
THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech at Milwaukee,

Wla., on the evening of the attempt to assassinate him, 14 Oct., 1912. He had received a bullet in the chest.

Bull Moose, an emblem of the Progressive Party in 1912, originated from the statement of President Roosevelt made upon his arrival at Chicago just before the Republican convention, that he felt like a "Bull Moose."

E. C. SMITH, Dictionary of American Politics. The first discovered newspaper use of the term was in the New York Tribune, 26 June, 1912. The New York Times used it the following day.

I want to be a Bull Moose,
And with the Bull Moose stand
With Antlers on my forehead
And a Big Stick in my hand.

UNKNOWN, Inscription, on California campaign banner at Bull Moose convention, 1912.

I took the canal zone and let Congress debate, and while the debate goes on the canal does also.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, referring to his action in recognizing the Republic of Panama, immediately following its secession from Colombia. (New York Times, 24 March, 1911.)

My hat's in the ring. The fight is on and I'm stripped to the buff.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Newspaper Interview, at Cleveland, Ohio, 21 Feb., 1912, while on his way to Columbus to address the State Constitutional Convention.

When a man says at breakfast in the morning, "No, thank you, I will not take any more coffee," it does not mean that he will not take any more coffee tomorrow morning, or next week, or next month, or next year.

LYMAN ABBOTT, Editorial, The Outlook, 17 Feb., 1912. (Vol. c, p. 338.) Mr. Abbott was arguing that Theodore Roosevelt's statement, while serving his second term as President, that he would not be a candidate for a third term, referred only to a third consecutive term.

Any one can issue manifestoes.

THOMAS C. PLATT, referring to Theodore Roosevelt's first message as Governor of New York, 1899, in which a number of reforms were proposed. (ALEXANDER, Four Famous New Yorkers, p. 326.)

Don't hit at all if it is honorably possible to avoid hitting; but never hit soft.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT. (J. B. BISHOP, Theodore Roosevelt. Vol. ii, p. 437.)

It is no advantage to change the Barneses, the Guggenheims and the Penroses, for the Murphys, the Sullivans and the Taggartas.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, in campaign against Wilson and Taft in 1912.

Dear Maria.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Letter to Mrs. Ballouy Storer, 9 Dec., 1906.

We fight in honorable fashion for the good of mankind; fearless of the future, unbreeding of our individual fates, with unflinching hearts and undimmed eyes; we stand at Armageddon, and we battle for the Lord.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, at Chicago, 17 June, 1912, on the eve of the Republican National Convention which re-nominated Taft.

We seemed to see our flag unfurled,
Our champion waiting in his place
For the last battle of the world,—
The Armageddon of the race.
J. G. WHITTIER, Rantoul.

And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

New Testament: Revelation, xvi, 16. Armageddon, or Har-Magedon, meant Mount Megiddo, possibly Mount Carmel, at whose foot lay the plain of Megiddo, the scene of many battles.

Salamander? Call it Gerrymander.

BENJAMIN RUSSELL, Retort, in 1811, to Gilbert Stuart, the celebrated painter. Russell was editor of the Massachusetts Centinel, and had hung on the wall of his office a map showing the proposed redistricting of Essex County, which the Democratic legislature was putting through in order to give them control of the district. Russell had blocked the new district off in color, and Stuart, coming in one day and looking at the map, remarked that it resembled a monstrous animal, and took a pencil and added claws. "There," he said, "that will do for a salamander." "Salamander?" echoed Russell. "Call it Gerrymander," and coined a word which has passed into the language to describe sinuous political redistricting. The point of the retort was that the Governor of Massachusetts was named Elbridge Gerry, and it was he who was supposed to have instigated the redistricting, though, as it developed later, he was opposed to it. It should be noted that his name was pronounced with a hard "g." (See BUCKINGHAM, Specimens of Newspaper Writing, vol. ii, p. 91; Dictionary of American Biography, vol. xvi, p. 238.) Mr. John Ward Dean in an article in the New England Historical and Genealogical Register (vol. xlii, p. 374), questions the attribution of the phrase to Mr. Russell, citing a contemporary statement of Samuel Batchelder, of Cambridge, to the effect that the claws were added by Elkanah Tisdale, a miniature painter, and that the name "gerrymander" was suggested by Richard Alsop, a once-noted political satirist. Another account attributes it to James Ogilvie, a lecturer on oratory.

I have come home to look after my fences. JOHN SHERMAN, Speech, to his neighbors at Mansfield, Ohio, referring to the fences around his farm; said to be the origin of the political phrase. (See STODDARD, As I Knew Them, p. 161.)

1 I will not accept if nominated, and will not serve if elected.

WILLIAM TECUMSEH SHERMAN, Telegram, to General Henderson of Missouri, 5 June, 1884. Henderson was at the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and had repeatedly urged Sherman to accept the nomination for President, which Sherman had steadily refused to do. The telegram was in answer to a last urgent appeal. See SHERMAN, Memoirs, 4th edition, p. 466. This final chapter was added by members of Sherman's family after his death, and the text of the telegram as given is on the evidence of his son, Thomas. It is usually quoted, "If nominated I will not accept; if elected I will not serve." On 25 May, Sherman had written to James G. Blaine, "I will not in any event entertain or accept a nomination as candidate for President. . . . I would account myself a fool, a madman, an ass, to embark now, at sixty-five years of age, in a career that may at any moment become tempestuous." See North Amer. Review, Dec., 1888.

2 Hello, my old potato.

ALFRED E. SMITH, to Franklin D. Roosevelt, at the Democratic State Convention, at Albany, N. Y., 4 Oct., 1932. It was the first meeting of the two men since Roosevelt had defeated Smith for the presidential nomination at the Democratic National Convention at Chicago on 1 July, after a bitter contest, accentuated by Smith's feeling that he had been betrayed. It has been denied that Smith actually said this, but in a letter to the compiler he writes: "At the State Convention for the nomination of Governor, President Roosevelt was on the platform as I came up to place Governor Lehman's name in nomination and I said to him, 'Hello, my old potato.'"

"Well, ta ta, my turnip!" observed Mr. Waddle, and away the coaches rattled in opposite directions.

HENRY COCKTON, Valentine Vox, Ch. 5. (1840)

3 What a man that would be had he . . . the least knowledge of the value of red tape.

SYDNEY SMITH, referring to Sir James Mackintosh. (LADY HOLLAND, Memoir, p. 245.)

4 In your war of 1812, your arms on shore were covered by disaster. . . . Who first relit the fires of national glory and made the welkin ring with the shouts of victory?

SENATOR R. F. STOCKTON, Speech, U. S. Senate, 7 Jan., 1852, against flogging in the navy. (Congressional Globe, v. 21, pt. 1, p. 219, col. 3.)

5 Hanna was a fat-frier, not the fat-frier. The fat-frier was John P. Forster, president of the League of Young Republican Clubs. It was in 1888 that he wrote a letter suggesting 'to fry the fat out of the manufacturers,' i. e., secure campaign contributions.

HENRY L. STODDARD, As I Knew Them.

6 You can't beat somebody with nobody.

MARK SULLIVAN, Our Times, iii, 289. Quoted as an axiom of practical politics. Usually attributed to "Uncle Joe" Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives for many years.

One truth which they enforce is the old one that you can't beat somebody with nobody.

Editorial, N. Y. Times, 3 July, 1932.

7 Congressmen? In Washington they hitch horses to them.

TIMOTHY D. (BIG TIM) SULLIVAN, of New York City, announcing his decision to retire from the House of Representatives and return to the New York State Senate.

8 The Forgotten Man works and votes—generally he prays—but his chief business in life is to pay. . . . If any student of social science comes to appreciate the case of the Forgotten Man, he will become . . . a hard-hearted skeptic as regards any scheme of social amelioration. He will always want to know, Who and where is the Forgotten Man in this case, who will have to pay for it all?

WILLIAM GRAHAM SUMNER, The Forgotten Man. (Title essay in The Forgotten Man and Other Essays, 1883.)

The State cannot get a cent for any man without taking it from some other man, and this latter must be a man who has produced and saved it. The latter is the Forgotten Man.

WILLIAM GRAHAM SUMNER, What Social Classes Owe to Each Other. As will be seen from the above, Mr. Sumner's "forgotten man" was the taxpayer.

The Forgotten Man was never more completely forgotten than he is now. Congress does not know that he exists. The President [Warren G. Harding] suspects that there is such a person, who may turn up at the polls in November, but he is not quite sure.

FRANK I. COBB, Editorial, New York World, Sept., 1922.

These unhappy times call for the building of plans that rest upon the forgotten, the unorganized but indispensable units of economic power, for plans like those of 1917 that build from the bottom up and not from the top down, that put their faith once more in the forgotten man at the bottom of the economic pyramid.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 7 April, 1932. It will be noted that Mr. Roosevelt's "forgotten man" bears no resemblance to Mr. Sumner's.

The Forgotten Man is a myth.

ALFRED E. SMITH, Editorial, The New Outlook, October, 1932, p. 3.

9 Talking for Buncombe.

FELIX WALKER, Speech on the Missouri Bill,

House of Representatives, 25 Feb., 1820. Walker was a Representative from North Carolina, and Buncombe County was part of his district. He was a naïve old mountaineer, familiarly called "the old oil-jug" because of his flow of language, and toward the close of the debate on the Missouri Bill, while the House was impatiently calling for the question, he rose to speak. Several members urged him to desist, but he refused, stating that he was bound "to make a speech for Buncombe." For a full account of the incident, see the communication from Dr. William Darlington in The Historical Magazine, Oct., 1858. (Vol. i, no. 10, p. 311.) Dr. Darlington was a member of the House at the time and was seated near Walker when he coined the phrase. His account is partially confirmed by a passage in the Annals of Congress (16th Cong., 1st sess., vol. xxxvi, col. 1539) which states, under date of 25 Feb., 1820: "Mr. Walker, of North Carolina, rose then to address the Committee on the question; but the question was called for so clamorously and so perseveringly that Mr. W. could proceed no farther than to move that the Committee rise." The phrase has been erroneously attributed to John Culpepper by Joseph T. Buckingham (Personal Memoirs and Recollections of Editorial Life, vol. I, p. 207, footnote), but no evidence is given to prove the attribution, and while Mr. Culpepper was also a Congressman from North Carolina, Buncombe County was not in his district. One A. Wilder, writing in Miscellaneous Notes and Queries (Manchester, N. H.) April, 1887 (vol. iv, no. 4, p. 287), attributes the phrase to Thomas L. Clingman, but Clingman did not enter Congress until 1843, and the phrase was in use long before that, as is shown by the following:

"Talking to Bunkum!" This is an old and common saying at Washington, when a member of Congress is making one of those hum-drum and unlistened-to "long talks" which have lately become so fashionable—not with the hope of being heard in the House, but to afford an enlightened representative a pretence for sending a copy of his speech to his constituents. . . . This is cantily called "Talking to Bunkum": an "honorable gentleman" long ago, having said that he was not talking to the House, but to the people of a certain county in his district, which, in local phrase, he called "Bunkum."

UNKNOWN (Niles' Weekly Register, 27 Sept., 1828. Vol. xxv, no. 889, p. 66.)

Several years ago, in Congress, the member from this immediate district [Buncombe County, N. C.] arose to address the House, without any extraordinary powers either in manner or matter to interest his audience. Many members left the hall. Very naively, he told those who were so kind as to remain that they might go too; for he should speak for some time, but he was only talking for Buncombe.

JOHN WHEELER, Historical Sketches of North Carolina. Vol. II, p. 52. (1851)

Talk plain truth, and leave bunkum for right honorables who keep their places thereby.

CHARLES KINGOLEY, Two Years Ago. Ch. 25.

America too will find that caucuses, division-lists, stump-oratory, and speeches to Buncombe will not carry men to the immortal gods.

CARLYLE, Latter-Day Pomphlets: Parliaments.

1 Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party.

CHARLES E. WELLER. A sentence devised to test the practicability of the first typewriter, constructed at Milwaukee, Wis., by Christopher Latham Sholes, in the autumn of 1867. (See WELLER, The Early History of the Typewriter.) Mr. Weller was a court reporter and a friend of Sholes. He says: "We were then in the midst of an exciting political campaign and it was then for the first time that the sentence was inaugurated . . . and repeated many times to test the speed of the machine." It is still in use, and The New Yorker (1 Feb., 1936, p. 12) states that there are also test sentences for the telephone and the telegraph. The Bell Laboratories use "Joe took father's shoe-bench out" to test the volume of its phones, and "Some settlers suggest settling southern settlements in succession" to test articulation. The Western Union uses "William Jax quickly taught five dozen Republicans" to test its teletype-writers, and for radio-telephony, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company uses "The barking dog's bark is worse than its bite."

2 Pitiless publicity.

WOODROW WILSON. His prescription for curing the ills of government. (SULLIVAN, Our Times, iv, 119.) See 1653:10.

They released a letter written five years earlier by Wilson to Adrian Joline, expressing the wish that "something at once dignified and effective" might be done to "knock Bryan once and for all into a cocked hat."

PAXTON HIBBEN, The Peerless Leader, p. 303.

3 To seek for political flaws is no use; His opponents will find he is sound on the goose.

UNKNOWN. (Providence Journal, 18 June, 1857.) "Sound on the goose" meant orthodox as to opinions and sentiments, on the popular side of any discussion.

4 The Copperhead Bright Convention meets in Indianapolis today.

UNKNOWN. (Cincinnati Gazette, 30 July, 1862.)

A glorious sequel to the Copperhead convention. UNKNOWN. (Cincinnati Gazette, 31 July, 1862.) Both references were to the Indiana Democratic convention, and are the earliest printed use of the word "copperhead" in this connection. James Ford Rhodes (History of the United States, iv, 224) states that the earliest use of the word he could find was in the Cincinnati Commercial, of 1 Oct., 1862. Albert Matthews (Publications of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts, xx, 207) states that he found it in the Chicago Tribune, for 24 Sept., 1862. (PAUL S. SMITH, First Use of the Term Copperhead, American Historical Review, xxiii, 799.)

Every Democrat who did not openly and actively support the Administration and the war was labelled a venomous 'copperhead,' at once a southern sympathiser and a traitor to the Union.

MILN EAWIN, History of Williamson County, Illinois, p. 302.

As the copperhead is a particularly poisonous snake indigenous to southern Illinois the meaning was clear.

PAXTON HIBBEN, The Peerless Leader, p. 25.

In the election of 1904, the state of Missouri for the first time appeared in the Republican column. On November 10, John T. McCutcheon published a cartoon in the Chicago Tribune with this caption, which instantly became famous. A fragment by Mark Twain called The Mysterious Stranger was published in 1916.

³ Doctor Livingstone, I presume?

HENRY M. STANLEY to David Livingstone, when he found the latter in the heart of the African jungle, 10 Nov., 1871. Stanley's expedition had been financed by James Gordon Bennett, publisher of the New York Herald, and on 2 July, 1872, The Herald printed an account of the meeting in a "special from Central Africa." Here is its description of the crucial moment:

Preserving a calmness of exterior before the Arabs which was hard to simulate as he reached the group, Mr. Stanley said:—

"Doctor Livingstone, I presume?"

A smile lit up the features of the hale white man as he answered:—

"Yes, that is my name."

⁴ "Tell it to the Marines." The time of the saying was toward eleven of the clock on an autumn morning in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and sixty-four; the place, the Green Park of St. James. It so befell that His light-hearted Majesty Charles the Second, with an exceedingly bored expression upon his swarthy face, was strolling in the shade with the ingenious Mr. Samuel Pepys, Secretary to the Admiralty. [Pepys tells the King an anecdote about flying fish having been seen in the waters of the Indies by the officers of a British ship. The King is incredulous and turns to a Colonel of the newly-raised Marine Regiment, who happens to be near.]

"What say you, Colonel, to a man who swears he hath seen fishes fly in the air?"

"I should say, Sir," returned the sea-soldier simply, "that the man hath sailed in southern seas. For, when Your Majesty's business carried me there of late, I did frequently observe more flying fish in one hour than the hairs of my head in number."

His Majesty glanced narrowly at the Colonel's frank, weather-beaten face. Then, with a laugh, he turned to the Secretary.

"Mr. Pepys," said he, "from the very nature of their calling, no class of our subjects can have so wide a knowledge of seas and lands as the officers and men of our loyal Marine Regiment. Henceforward ere we cast doubts upon a tale that lacketh likelihood, we will first tell it to the Marines."

W. P. DRURY, The Tadpole of an Archangel, The Petrified Eye, and Other Naval Stories: Preface, (1904)

The story of "Tell it to the Marines" is taken from my earliest literary crime, The Petrified Eye. It is a leg-pull of my youth of which I have grown a little ashamed. I seem to have forged the style of Samuel Pepys so successfully that many of our comrades have wasted time hunting thru the diary to verify my statement.

W. P. DRURY, Letter, to Brig-Gen. George Richards, U. S. Marine Corps. (See N. Y. Sun, 4 Feb., 1931.) Mr. Drury is himself a retired Colonel of the British Marine Corps.

Song: Familiar Refrains

⁵ A face behind a mask,
A pair of dreamy eyes,
A smile that drags you downward,
From the gates of Paradise;
Forgive, but don't forget,
These warning words I ask,
For such a face, brought my disgrace,
A face behind a mask.

WILL D. COSS, A Face Behind a Mask, (1900)
Music by Ben M. Jerome. Popularised by Bettyla Girard.

For I just can't make my eyes behave,
Two bad brown eyes, I am their slave;
My lips may say, "Run away from me,"
But my eyes say, "Come and play with me."
WILL D. COSS, I Just Can't Make My Eyes Behave, (1906) Sung with great élan by Anna Held in A Parisian Model.

For a woman loves forever, but a man loves for a day;
She makes him a god for her worship, he makes her a toy for his play;
For the man is the guest at the banquet where music of love madly plays,
But the woman, 'tis ever the woman who pays.

WILL D. COSS, It's the Woman Who Pays,
Music by Gus Edwards, (1916)

School-days, school-days, dear old golden rule days,

Readin' and 'ritin' and 'rithmetic,
Taught to the tune of a hick'ry stick;
You were my queen in calico,

I was your bushful barefoot beau.

And you wrote on my slate, I love you, Joe,
When we were a couple of kids.

WILL D. COSS, School-Days. (1907) Music by Gus Edwards.

Sing of joy, sing of bliss,

Home was never like this,

Yip-I-Addy-I-Ay!

WILL D. COSS, Yip-I-Addy-I-Ay. (1908) Music by John H. Flynn. Introduced by Blanche Ring in The Merry Widow and the Devil.

Oh, my poor Nelly Gray, they have taken you
away,

And I'll never see my darling any more;

I'm sitting by the river and I'm weeping all
the day,

For you've gone from the old Kentucky shore.

BENJAMIN RUSSELL HANBY, Darling Nelly Gray. (1856) A lament of a young negro slave for his sweetheart, which became ammunition for the abolitionists just prior to the Civil War. The Hanby home at Westerville, Ohio, has recently been acquired by the state and converted into a memorial.

I guess I'll have to telegraph my baby.

GEORGE M. COHAN, Title and refrain. (1898)

Over there, over there, send the word, send the word over there!

That the Yanks are coming, the Yanks are coming,
The drums rum-tumming ev'rywhere:

So prepare, say a pray'r,

Send the word, send the word to beware!

We'll be over, we're coming over,

And we won't come back till it's over, over there.

GEORGE M. COHAN, Over There. (1917) Cohan received public thanks from President Wilson for this song, which became the official marching song of the American army. There was, of course, an epidemic of patriotic songs when America entered the war. The following are examples:

Away he went, to live in a tent;

Over in France with his regiment.

Were you there, and tell me, did you notice?

They were all out of step but Jim.

IRVING BARLIN, They Were All Out of Step But Jim. (1918)

Sister Susie's sewing shirts for soldiers,

Such skill at sewing shirts our sly young sister
Susie shows!

Some soldiers send epistles, say they'd sooner sleep in thistles!

Than the saucy, soft, short shirts for soldiers sister
Susie sews.

R. P. WILSON, Sister Susie's Sewing Shirts for Soldiers. (1914) Music by Herman E. Darewski. Sung by Al Johnson.

Don't try to steal the sweetheart of a soldier,

It's up to you to play a manly part:

Tho' he's over there and she's over here,

Still she's always in his heart.

ALFRED BRYAN, Don't Try to Steal the Sweetheart of a Soldier. (1917)

He's had no lovin' for a long, long time,

And he's got to have a lot of it now.

WILLIAM TRACEY, title and refrain of song set to music in 1919 by Maceo Pinkard, celebrating the return of the A.E.F. He'd won a lot of medals but no "lovin'."

How'ya gonna keep 'em down on the farm,

After they've seen Paree?

SAM M. LEWIS and JOE YOUNG. Title and refrain of song set to music in 1919 by Walter Donaldson. Much more realistic than Tracey's effort quoted above. For "I did not raise my boy to be a soldier," etc., see 1864:7.

If you lak-a-me, lak I lak-a-you

And we lak-a-both the same,

I lak-a say, this very day,

I lak-a-change your name, . . .

One live as two, two live as one

Under the bam-boo tree.

BOB COLE, Under The Bamboo Tree. (1902)

Sung by Marie Cahill in Sally in Our Alley.

When you're all by your lonely,

You and your only!

Under the Yum Yum tree.

ANDREW B. STERLING, Under the Yum Yum

Tree. (1910) Music by Harry Von Tilzer.

Let us bless the golden hours

With no eyes to mark,

That we pass among the maidens,

Kissing in the dark!

GEORGE COOPER, Kissing in the Dark. (1863)

Music by Stephen Collins Foster.

Softly she murmurs, while chills o'er her creep,

"Why did they dig ma's grave so deep?"

GEORGE COOPER, Why Did They Dig Ma's

Grave so Deep? Music by J. P. Skelly.

There never were two greater chums than we,

Johnny, my old friend John.

WILLIAM COURTRIGHT, Johnny, My Old Friend

John. (1894)

Elsie from Chelsea, I thought of nobody elsie

But Elsie from Chelsea! Nobody elsie for me!

HARRY DACKZ, Elsie from Chelsea. (1896)

Sweet Katie Connor,

I dote upon her.

Kate, Kate, as sure as fate, you'll have to marry

me,

Or else I'll have a notion

Of diving in the ocean,

And flirting with the mermaids at the bottom of the sea!

HARRY DACKZ, Sweet Katie Connor. (1890)

Sung by Maggie Cline at Tony Pastor's

Theatre, New York.

While the train rolled onward,

A husband sat in tears,

Thinking of the happiness

Of just a few short years;

For baby's face brings pictures of

A cherished hope that's dead,

But baby's cries can't waken her

In the baggage coach ahead.

Gussix L. DAVIS, In the Baggage Coach Ahead. (1896) Rewritten from Frank Archer's Mother. See 1350:21. Made famous by Imogene Comer, who sang it for the first time at Howard's Athenaeum, Boston, Mass. The song is said to be founded upon an incident on a railway train of which Arnold was conductor and Davis the pullman porter.

1 So laugh, lads, and quaff, lads,
'Twill make you stout and hale;

Through all my days I'll sing the praise
Of brown October ale.

REGINALD DE KOVEN, Brown October Ale. (1891) From De Koven's famous light opera, Robin Hood. See also under Clement Scott, below.

2 Let her go, Gallagher!
WILLIAM W. DELANEY. Title and refrain. (1887)

3 Ev'ry little bit added to what you've got makes just a little bit more.
WILLIAM A. and LAWRENCE M. DILLON. Title and refrain. (1907)

4 It's English you know, quite English you know,
How queer are the people, it's English you know,
We copy their ways, we pay for their plays,
It's English, quite English, so English you know.
W. S. DOUGLASS, Quite English. (1885)

5 "Just tell them that you saw me," she said,
"they'll know the rest;
Just tell them I was looking well, you know;
Just whisper if you get a chance to mother
dear, and say,
I love her as I did long, long ago."
PAUL DRESSER, Just Tell Them that You Saw Me. (1895)

The letter that he longed for never came.
PAUL DRESSER. Title and refrain. (1886)
We shared with each other our joys and tears,
We were sweethearts for many years.
PAUL DRESSER, We Were Sweethearts for Many Years. (1895)

6 Arrah Wanna, on my honor I'll take care of
you,
I'll be kind and true, we can love and bill and coo,

In a wigwam built of shamrocks green, we'll make those red men smile,
When you're Missus Barney, heap much Carney, from Killarney's Isle.

JACK DRISLANE, Arrah Wanna. (1906) Music
by Theodore Morse.

7 But fu' real melojous music,
Dat jes' strikes yo' hea't and clings,
Jes' you stan' an' listen wif me,
When Malindy sings.

PAUL LAURENCE DUNBAR, When Malindy Sings.
Who dat say chicken in dis crowd?
Speak de word agin, and speak it loud.

Blame de lan'; let white folks rule it,

I've looking for a pullet;

Who dat say chicken in dis crowd?

PAUL LAURENCE DUNBAR, Who Dat Say Chicken?

8 We never speak as we pass by,
Altho' a tear bedims her eye;
I know she thinks of her past life,
When we were loving man and wife.

FRANK EGERTON, We Never Speak as We Pass By. (1882) Music by Charles D. Blake.

9 Hail! Hail! the gang's all here,—
What the hell do we care,

What the hell do we care?

Hail! Hail! we're full of cheer,—

What the hell do we care, Bill!

D. A. ESTROM, Hail! Hail! the Gang's All Here. (1897) A popular song during the war with Spain, sung to an air from W. S. Gilbert's The Pirates of Penzance.

10 Up in a balloon, boys, up in a balloon,
All among the little stars, sailing round the moon;

Up in a balloon, boys, up in a balloon,
It's something very jolly to be up in a balloon.

H. B. FARNIE, Up in a Balloon. (1869)

11 Teach me to love you, I'm willing to learn.
EDGAR T. FARRAN. Title and refrain. (1912)

12 Please don't take the baby from me,
He's all that I have now,
You'll make me so happy if you'll let him be,
I'll take care of him somehow.

FRED H. FINCH, Please Don't Take the Baby from Me. (1904) Sung by Adelaide Ackland.
Addressed to a policeman who had arrived to take the baby from its impoverished mother, "in society's name."

13 Down went McGinty to the bottom of the say,
And he must be very wet, for they haven't found him yet,

But they say his ghost comes round the docks
before the break of day,
Dressed in his best suit of clothes.

JOSEPH FLYNN, Down Went McGinty. First sung at Hyde & Behman's theatre, Brooklyn,
N. Y., in 1889.

14 Keep the home fires burning, while your hearts are yearning,
Tho' your lads are far away they dream of home.

MRS. LENA GUILBERT FORD, Keep the Home Fires Burning. Theme suggested by Ivor Novello, who wrote the music. Published in 1915, and popular during the World War.

15 Say it with flowers, the fairest that grow,
Roses as red as the dawn's rosy glow,
Say it with flowers from love's sweetest bowers

And you'll find her waiting, waiting for you.
NEVILLE FLEZZON, Say It with Flowers. (1919)
Music by Albert Von Tilzer.

1
One got the kisses and kindly words,
That was her pet, Marie;
One told her troubles to bees and birds,
That one was only me!
WALTER H. FORD, Only Me. (1894) Music by John W. Bratton.

Ev'ry Sunday down to her home we go,
All the boys and all the girls they love her so.
Always jolly, heart that is true, I know,
She is the Sunshine of Paradise Alley.
WALTER H. FORD, The Sunshine of Paradise Alley. (1895) Suggested by the name of an alley in Philadelphia, Pa. Music by John W.
Bratton. Introduced by Lottie Gilson at the Casino Roof Garden, New York City, and used also by Bessie Bonehill in 1492.

2
Ah! may the red rose live away,
To smile upon earth and sky!
Why should the beautiful ever weep?
Why should the beautiful die?
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, *Ah! May the Red
Rose Live Away*. (1850)
Come where my love lies dreaming.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER. Title and refrain.
(1853)

Oh! give the stranger happy cheer,
When, o'er his cheek, the tear-drops start;
The balm that flows from one kind word
May heal the wound in a breaking heart.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, *Give the Stranger
Happy Cheer*. (1851)
Summer will pass and skies will gray,
Keep my rose for a wintry day.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Long-Ago Day.
(1851)

Molly dear, I cannot linger;
Let me soon be gone.
Time now points with warning finger
T'wards the coming dawn.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, *Molly Dear, Good
Night*. (1861)

For tho' nothing to another,
She was all the world to me.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, She Was All the World to Me. (1864) This song was copyrighted February 23. Foster had died ten days previously.

Wilt thou be true, though lips of scorn
Seek to revile me when I am gone?
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Wilt Thou Be True?
(1864)

3
Little Ella's an angel in the skies,
Sing, merrily sing.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Little Ella's an Angel. (1863)

Tell me of the angels, mother,
And the radiant land
Where my gentle little brother
Joined their happy band.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Tell Me of the Angels, Mother. (1863)

Little Willie's gone to Heaven,
Praise the Lord!
All his sins have been forgiven,
Praise the Lord!
Joyful let your voices rise,
Do not come with tearful eyes,
Willie's dwelling in the skies,
Willie's gone to Heaven!

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Willie's Gone to Heaven. (1863) Foster was fond of Willie.
He wrote two more songs about him, *Willie,
My Brave*, and Willie, We Have Missed You, and composed the music for another by George Cooper, Willie Has Gone to the War.

4
Oh! comrades, fill no glaas for me.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER. Title and refrain.
(1855)

For the dear old Flag I die,
Mother, dry your weeping eye.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, *For the Dear Old
Flag I Die*. (1863)

Take the locket, soldier, brother,
Don't forget, give this to mother.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Give This to Mother. (1864)

Nothing but a plain old soldier,
An old revolutionary soldier,
But I've handled a gun
Where noble deeds were done,
For the name of my commander was George Washington.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, I'm Nothing But a Plain Old Soldier. (1863)

Tell me, tell me, weary soldier,
From the rude and stirring wars,
Was my brother in the battle
Where you gain'd those noble scars?
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Was My Brother in the Battle? (1862)

5
Oh! Belle, de Lou'siana Belle,
I's gwine to marry you, Lou'siana Belle.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Lou'siana Belle.
(1847) Written for Joseph Murphy.

Down in de cornfield,
Hear dat mournful sound:
All de darkies am a-weeping,
Massa's in de cold, cold ground.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, *Massa's in de Cold
Ground*. (1853)

Nelly Bly! Nelly Bly! bring de broom along, We'll sweep de kitchen clean, my dear, and hab a little song.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Nelly Bly. (1850)
I'm coming, I'm coming, for my head is bending
low:

I hear those gentle voices calling, "Old Black Joe."
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Old Black Joe.
(1860)

Dere was an old nigger, dey call'd him Uncle Ned,
He's dead long ago, long ago;
He had no wool on de top ob de head,
De place wha de wool ought to grow.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Old Uncle Ned.
(1848) Written for William Roark, of the "Sable Harmonists."

Oh! Susanna, don't you cry for me,
I've come from Alabama wid my banjo on my knee.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Oh! Susanna. Sung for first time at Andrews' Eagle Ice Cream Saloon, Pittsburgh, Pa., by Nelson Kneass, 11 Sept., 1847, and soon a world-wide hit. Used by the Republicans in the Landon campaign of 1936.

Den come again, Susanna,
By de gas-light ob de moon;

We'll tum de old piano

When de banjo's out ob tune.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Ring de Banjo. (1851)

I hear my true-lub weep,

I hear my true-lub sigh,

"Way down in Ca-l-ro Dis nigga's gwine to die."

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Way Down in Ca-l-ro. (1850)

Nelly was a lady,

Last night she died,

Toll de bell for lubby Nell,

My dark Virginny bride.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Nelly Was a Lady. (1849)

1 Tell the people far and wide that better times are coming.

S. C. FOSTER, Better Times Are Coming. (1862)

Abraham the Joker soon will diskliver

We'll send him on a gunboat up Salt River. . .

Sound the rally thro' the whole United States,
Little Mac and Pendleton are our candidates.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Little Mac. (1864)

A campaign song for Gen. George B. McClellan. "Up Salt River" dates from the Clay-Jackson campaign of 1832.

2 There's her picture on the table,

There's a baby in the cradle,

There's a husband crying bitterly alone,

There's no wife's voice to cheer,

In his sorrow to be near,

What was paradise is now a broken home.

WILL H. FOX, The Broken Home. (1892) Popularized by May Howard.

3 Don't judge by appearances, but by his actions more,

You never know when you may drive a good man from your door;

Clothes don't make the man, you know, some wise person wrote,

For many an honest heart may beat beneath a ragged coat.

HAWLEY FRANK, Many an Honest Heart May Beat Beneath a Ragged Coat. (1901) Music

by Arthur Trevelyan. Popularized by Effie Brooklyn.

4 Sweet Adeline, My Adeline,

At night, dear heart, For you I pine.

In all my dreams, Your fair face beams;

You're the flower of my heart, Sweet Adeline.

RICHARD H. GIBARD, Sweet Adeline. (1903)

Music by Harry Armstrong. "The Old Faithful of all harmonic geysers."

5 A shady nook, a babbling brook,

Two lips where kisses dwell-o,

"Swear to be true." "I do! I do!"

Aha! the lucky fellow.

J. CHEEVER GOODWIN, A Shady Nook. From the comic opera, Wang. (1891)

For that elephant ate all night,

And that elephant ate all day,

Do what he would to get him food,

The cry was still, "More hay!"

J. CHEEVER GOODWIN, Elephant Song from Wang. (1891) See also 1558:1.

6 Two little girls in blue, lad, two little girls in blue,

They were sisters, we were brothers, and learned to love the two.

CHARLES GRAHAM, Two Little Girls in Blue. (1893) Inspired by Harris's After the Ball, and also featured by J. Aldrich Libby. See under HARRIS, below.

7 Just when it seemed that the end had come,

You landed me safe on the coast,

And proved you were faithful, yes, staunch and true,

Just when I needed you most.

WILLIAM BENSON GRAY, Just When I Needed You Most. (1900)

Oh, Mr. Austin, since I've been in Boston Everything's been happiness without a care or pain:

My brain's been in a constant whirl

And I'll be a much wiser girl

When I go back to Saccarappa, Maine.

WILLIAM BENSON GRAY, Oh, Mr. Austin. (1899)

8 Ol' man river, dat ol' man river,

He must know sumpin', but don't say nothin',

He just keeps rollin', he keeps on rollin' along.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, 2ND, Ol' Man River. (1927) Music by Jerome Kern.

9 Brother, can you spare a dime?

E. Y. HARBURG. Title and refrain. (1932)

10 Oh! Mister Johnson, turn me loose,

Got no money but a good excuse.

BEN R. HARNEY, Mister Johnson. (1896)

11 We shouldered arms and marched and marched away,

From Baxter street we marched to Avenue A;

The fies and drums how sweetly they did play,

As we marched, marched, marched in the Mulligan Guard.

EDWARD HARRISMAN, The Mulligan Guard.

(1873) Music by David Braham. The skit of which the song was the conclusion, a satire against the numerous semi-political military organizations of the period, was first produced at the Academy of Music, Chicago, in July, 1873. The melody became famous. Kipling mentions it in Kim as being played by the British bands in India.

1 Many a heart is aching, if you could read them all,
Many the hopes that have vanished, after the ball.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, After the Ball. (1892) One of the greatest hits in the history of Tin Pan Alley. First sung by J. Aldrich Libby, a famous baritone, at a matinee of Charles Hoyt's A Trip to Chinatown, at the Bijou Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

This is the end of our sinning,
Bright though as seemed the beginning,
You long for love that is surer,
Love that to you will be purer,
I hoped you'd always be near me,
That your heart ne'er would grow weary,
Yet you leave mine sad and dreary,
Now that I'm cast aside.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Cast Aside. (1895)

Just break the news to mother,
She knows how dear I love her,
And tell her not to wait for me,
For I'm not coming home.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Break the News to Mother. (1897) Another of Harris's great hits, recounting the heroic death of a soldier boy while saving the flag from the disgrace of being captured by the enemy on some unnamed battle-field of the Civil War. Harris got the refrain from a line in William Gillette's Secret Service, where a wounded drummer-boy is brought home and says to the darky at the door, "Break the news to mother." The song was sung with great effect by Emma Carus, and was popular with American soldiers during the war with Spain.

Then comes the sad awakening,
The pangs of deep regret,
She longed to be forgiven,
She prayed that he'd forget.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Then Comes the Sad Awakening. (1898) Sung by Gertrude Rutledge at Hammerstein's Victoria Roof Garden.

There'll come a time, some day
When I have passed away,
There'll be no father to guide you from day to day;

Think well of all I've said:

Honor the man you wed:

Always remember my story, there'll come a time.
CHARLES K. HARRIS, There'll Come a Time. (1895)

Too late, too late, alas! too late!
The words that now you speak;
Your vows so dear I dare not hear,
My love you must not seek!

Another now doth claim my vow,
Why, darling, did you wait?

APPENDIX

Had you but told your love last night—
Alas! 'tis now too late!

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Too Late, Alas! Too Late. (1895)

2 Listen to the mocking bird, listen to the mocking bird,
Still singing where the weeping willows wave.

ALICE HAWTHORNE, Listen to the Mocking Bird. (1870)

3 There'll be a hot time in the old town to-night!

JOSEPH HAYDEN. Refrain of popular song set to music by Theodore Metz in the fall of 1896, when the McIntyre and Heath Minstrels visited Old Town, La. Adopted by the American soldiers as the unofficial melody of the War with Spain.

4 Ain't it awful, Mabel?

JOHN EDWARD HAZZARD. Title and refrain. (1908)

5 I'd leave ma happy home for you,
You're de nicest man I ever knew.

WILL A. HEZLAN, I'd Leave Ma Happy Home for You. (1899) Music by Harry Von Tilzer.

I left my old Kentucky home for you.

WILLIAM JEROME. Title and refrain of a song set to music by Harry Von Tilzer in 1912.

I wouldn't leave my home if I were you.

ANDREW B. STERLING. Title and refrain of song set to music in 1899 by Harry Von Tilzer.

6 Dreaming, dreaming, of you, sweetheart, I am dreaming,
Dreaming of days, when you loved me best,
Dreaming of hours that have gone to rest. . . .
Dreaming.

L. S. HEISER, Dreaming. (1906) Music by J. Anton Dalley.

7 All coons look alike to me.

ERNEST HOGAN. Title and refrain. (1896) One of May Irwin's great hits.

8 Hello! ma baby, Hello! ma honey,

Hello! ma rag-time gal,

Send me a kiss by wire,

Baby, my heart's on fire!

If you refuse me, Honey, you'll lose me,

Then you'll be left alone; oh, baby,

Telephone and tell me I've your own.

FRANK HOWARD, Hello, Ma Baby. (1899)

For his last words were, Darling, I'll meet you
When the robins nest again.

FRANK HOWARD, When the Robins Nest Again.

Popular song, written in 1883, the title taken from a melody by Barney Fagan. Howard's real name was Martindale. "When the robins nest again" became, in the slang of the day, synonymous with never. It is so used in John Luther Long's novel, Madame Butterfly, and also in Puccini's opera.

With the robins I'll return.

JAMES J. WALKER. Title of lyric. (1907)

¹
The Bow'ry, the Bow'ry!
They say such things, and they do strange things

On the Bow'ry, the Bow'ry!
I'll never go there any more!

CHARLES H. HOYT, The Bowery. (1891) Music
by Percy Gaunt. Introduced by Harry Conner in A Trip to Chinatown, at the Madison Square Theatre, in New York City.

²
But they tell me I'm awfully clever,
Oh so clever, deuced clever;
They say that they never, no never,
Met a fella so clever before.

G. W. HUNT, Awfully Clever. (c. 1870)

³
Ting, ting, that's how the bells go,
Ting, ting, pretty young thing,
You be my wife, I'll buy the ring,
Servants to wait on your ting, ting, ting.

GEORGE EDWARD JACKSON, *Ting, Ting, That's
How the Bell Goss*. (1885)

Any old place I can hang my hat is home sweet home to me.

WILLIAM JEROME, Title and refrain. (1901)
Music by Jean Schwartz.

Bedelia, I want to steal ye.
WILLIAM JEROME, Bedelia. (1903)

He never came back, he never came back,

His dear form she never saw more,
But how bappy she'll be, when his sweet face she'll see,

When they meet on that beautiful shore.

WILLIAM JEROME, He Never Came Back.
(1891)

His sweet face she never saw more;

Each day as she strolls by the sea
She cries in despair as she offers this pray'r,
Oh, send back my darling to me.

WILLIAM JEROME, His Sweet Face She Never Saw More. (1892)

You needn't try to reason,
Your excuse is out of season,
Just kiss yourself good-bye.

WILLIAM JEROME, Just Kiss Yourself Good-Bye. (1902) Music by Jean Schwartz.

A "Jay" came to the city once, to see the funny sights,

With a little bunch of whiskers on his chin.

WILLIAM JEROME, The Little Bunch of Whiskers on His Chin. (1894) Music by Andrew Mack.

⁶
And now we are aged and gray, Maggie,

The trials of life nearly done,

Let us sing of the days that are gone, Maggie,
When you and I were young.

GEORGE W. JOHNSON, When You and I Were Young. (1866) Music by J. A. Butterfield.

⁷
Take your clothes and go.

IRVING JONES, Title and refrain. (1897)

⁸
Weddings make a lot of people sad,
But if you're not the groom, they're not so bad, . . .

But don't forget, folks,
That's what you get, folks,
For makin' whoopee.

GUS KAHN, Makin' Whoopee. (1928) Music by Walter Donaldson. "Whoopee" is said to have been used as long ago as 1450, in a play called Mankind. (See Literary Digest, vol. 107, no. 13, p. 43.) The Oxford Dictionary says it is of American origin, dating from 1845. Its modern vogue is largely due to Walter Winchell, newspaper columnist.

⁹
"Throw him down, McCloskey," was to be the battle cry,—

"Throw him down, McCloskey, you can lick him if you try."

JOHN W. KELLY, Throw Him Down, Mc-Closkey. A popular song made famous by Maggie Cline in 1890. Kelly was known as "The Rolling Mill Man," and is said to have got the inspiration for the song from a barroom fight in Union Square, New York.
Maloney, the Rolling Mill Man was a popular song of which he was the author.

¹⁰
Baby left her cradle for the golden shore,
O'er the silv'ry waters she has flown,
Gone to join the angels, peaceful evermore;
Empty is the cradle, Baby's gone.

HARRY KENNEDY, "Cradle's Empty, Baby's Gone". (1880)

I had fifteen dollars in my inside pocket,

Don't you see, to me it is a warning,

Saturday night I made a call

On a friend of Tammy Hall

And the devil a cent I had on Sunday morning.

HARRY KENNEDY, I Had Fifteen Dollars in My

Inside Pocket. (1885) Pat Rooney's great song.

Molly, Molly, always so jolly,
Always laughing, chock full of glee,
Living as happy as happy can be,
Molly and I and the baby.

HARRY KENNEDY, Molly and I and the Baby.
(1892)

Sailor, take care! Sailor, take care!

Danger is near thee, beware! beware!

Many brave hearts are asleep in the deep,

So beware! beware!

ARTHUR J. LAMB, Asleep in the Deep. (1896)

Music by H. W. Petrie. Introduced by John Early, with Haverly's Minstrels, at Mc-
Vicker's Theatre, Chicago.

She lives in a mansion of aching hearts,

She's one of a restless throng,

The diamonds that glitter around her throat,

They speak both of sorrow and song;

The smile on her face is only a mask,

And many the tear that starts,

For sadder it seems, when of mother she dreams,
In the mansion of aching hearts.

ARTHUR J. LAMB, The Mansion of Aching Hearts. (1902) Music by Harry Von Tilzer.

Tell me that beautiful story only once again,
Tell me of love and its glory, tho' I know it is in vain;

Your memory is always before me, with joy my soul to fill,
So tell me that beautiful story,—say that you love me still.

ARTHUR J. LAMB, Tell Me That Beautiful Story. (1902) Music by Albert Von Tilzer.

The waiter roars it through the hall,
"We don't give bread with one fishball!"

GEORGE MARTIN LANE, The Lay of the One Fishball. The ballad was used as the basis of a mock Italian opera, Il Pesceballo, by Professor Francis James Child and James Russell Lowell.

She's somebody's mother, boys, don't you know,
Somebody's mother, so old and so slow.

CHARLES LAWLOR and JAMES BLAKE, She's Somebody's Mother. (1897) An adaptation from Mary Dow Brine. See 1350:2.

There was I, waiting at the church,
Waiting at the church, waiting at the church,
When I found he'd left me in the lurch,
Lor, how it did upset me!

All at once he sent me round a note
Here's the very note, This is what he wrote,
Can't get away to marry you today—
My wife won't let me.

FRED W. LEMME, Waiting at the Church. (1906) Music by Henry E. Pether. Sung with great success by Vesta Victoria.

Don't say one word against her, do not say
she was untrue;

If another's won her heart she's not to blame.
This town is good, a-plenty, for the likes of me and you,

But she's a picture that deserves a better frame!
PAUL LESLIE, A Picture That Deserves a Better Frame. (1901)

Always take mother's advice,
She knows what is best for your good;
Let her kind words then suffice,
And always take mother's advice.

JENNIE LINDRAY, Always Take Mother's Advice. (1884)

I'm Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines,
I often live beyond my means;
I sport young ladies in their teens,
To cut a swell in the army.

WILLIAM LINDOARD, Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines. (1869) Chiefly remembered for Clyde Fitch's play of the same name, in which Ethel Barrymore made her debut at the Garrick Theatre, New York City, 4 Feb., 1901. Sometimes attributed to T. MacLagan.

Waltz me till I'm weary, dearie, and hold me tight,
Home was never once like this, now ain't I
right?

ARTHUR LONGBRACK, Waltz Me Till I'm Weary, Dearie. (1910) Music by Tom Sherman. See also 360:6.

Whoa! Emma! whoa! Emma!
Emma, you've put me in quite a dilemma.
JAMES LONSDALE, Whoa, Emma. (1877) Made famous by Tony Pastor.

I love my wife, But oh you kid!
JIMMY LUCAS. Title and Refrain. (1909)

Everybody works but father, and he sits around all day,
Feet in front of the fire, smoking his pipe of clay;

Mother takes in washing, so does sister Ann,
Everybody works at our house but my old man.

CHARLES W. MCCLINTOCK, Everybody Works but Father. (1891) One of Lew Dockstader's hits. The song was of English origin, and was revised for American consumption by Jean Havez. Princeton students of the period made it "Henry Clay," the name of their favorite cigar.

I've got the time, I've got the place,
Will some one kindly introduce me to the girl?
BALLARD MACDONALD, I've Got the Time, I've Got the Place, But It's Hard to Find the Girl. (1910) Music by S. R. Henry. Sung by Hetty King. See 1431:5.

We were comrades, comrades, ever since we were boys,
Sharing each other's sorrows, sharing each other's joys,
Comrades when manhood was dawning, faithful what e'er might betide,
When danger threatened my darling old comrade was there by my side.

FELIX MCGLENNON, Comrades. (1887)

Oh! Uncle John! isn't it nice on Broadway?
Oh! Uncle John! here I will remain.
Oh! Uncle John, now that I've seen the Bow'ry,
Life in the country's awful slow,
And I'll never go back again!
FELIX MCGLENNON, Oh! Uncle John. (1895) Sung by Kittle Gilmore.

Oh! what a difference in the morning!
Don't we regret it at the dawning!
Of cash we find a lack,
And with two eyes awful black,
It's "ten days or ten dollars," in the morning!
FELIX MCGLENNON, Oh! What a Difference in the Morning. (1891) A Lottie Gilson hit.

Has anybody here seen Kelly?
Kelly from the Emerald Isle?
WILLIAM J. MCKENNA, Has Anybody Here Seen

Kelly? An American version of an English song, Kelly from the Isle of Man, by C. W. Murphy and Will Letters. Sung by Nora Bayes in The Jolly Bachelors, produced in 1908.

Only one girl has my sympathy.
DAVE MARION, Only One Girl in the World for Me. (1895) Sung by Julius P. Witmark.

² Do not fear, my little darling,
And I will take you home.
Come and sit close beside me.
No more from me you shall roam,
For you were a babe in arms
When your mother left me one day;
Left me at home, deserted, alone,
And took you, my child, away.
EDWARD B. MARKS, The Little Lost Child. (1894) Introduced by Lottie Gilson, the "Little Magnet." It became—incredible as it may seem—one of the smash hits of the '90's.

³ Do they miss me at home, do they miss me?
'Twould be an assurance most dear
To know at this moment some lov'd one
Were saying, "I wish he were here."
CAROLINE ATKINSON MASON, Do They Miss Me At Home? (c. 1850) Music by Mrs. S. M. Grannis.

Little bright eyes, will you miss me,
Will you dream sweet dreams of me?
Come, my darling, sweetly kiss me,
I'll be constant still to thee.
JOHN T. RUTLEDGE, Little Bright Eyes, Will You Miss Me? (c. 1855)

⁴ "Oh! Fred! tell them to stop!" that was the cry of Maria;
But the more she said "Whoa,"
They said, "Let it go!"
And the swing went a little bit higher.
GEORGE MEEN, Oh! Fred! Tell Them to Stop!
One of Tony Pastor's great hits half a century ago.

⁵ But the cat came back, couldn't stay no longer,
Yes, the cat came back the very next day;
The cat came back, thought he was a goner,
But the cat came back for it wouldn't stay away.

HARRY S. MILLER, The Cat Came Back. (1893)
You can't lose me, Charlie.
HARRY S. MILLER. Title and refrain. (1893)

⁶ I'm afraid, I'm afraid,
I can't help the feeling that's over me stealing.
Some girls do, then they rue,
So nothing for me to-day.
J. F. MITCHELL, I'm Afraid. (1885) Popularized by Alice Clark.

⁷ In a cavern, in a canyon,
Excavating for a mine,

Dwelt a miner, forty-niner,
And his daughter, Clementine.
FRANCY MONTROSS, Clementine. (1880)

⁸ Wild women loved that child,
And he could drive tame women wild,
Sinbad was in bad all the time.
STANLEY MURPHY, Sinbad Was In Bad. (1917)
Music by Harry Carroll.

⁹ She's my sweetheart, I'm her beau,
She's my Annie, I'm her Joe,
Soon we'll marry, never to part,
Little Annie Rooney is my sweetheart.
MICHAEL NOLAN, Little Annie Rooney. (1890)
Sung by Nolan in the English music-halls, and introduced to America by Annie Hart,
"the Bowery girl," at the old London Theatre, New York City. Nolan was also the author of I'll Whistle and Wait for Katie.

¹⁰ There'll be no wedding bells for her,
Past are her days to love;
No one can claim her worthy hand,
Giv'n to the cause above.
GEORGE A. NORTON, No Wedding Bells for Her.
(1898) Music by James W. Casey. This cryptic chorus refers to "a maiden pure and trusting" who "took the veil," after "a pained expression came into her fair young face" when her "idol turned to dust."

Sing me a song of the Sunny South,
One with a sweet refrain;
Sing me a song of Dixie land,
That I may be happy again.
GEORGE A. NORTON, Sing Me a Song of the South. (1899) Music by James W. Casey.
Popularized by Will Thompson, the baritone of Primrose and Dockstader's minstrels.

¹¹ Take me out to the ball game,
Take me out with the crowd,
Buy me some peanuts and cracker-jack,
I don't care if I never get back.
Let me root, root, root for the home team,
If they don't win it's a shame,
For it's one, two, three strikes you're out,
At the old ball game.

JACK NORWORTH, Take Me Out to the Ball Game. (1908) Music by Albert Von Tilzer.
Popularized by Nora Bayes.

¹² There was an old man and he had two sons,
He had, he had,
He lived on a ranch, so the story runs,
He did, he did.

'Twas built on the good old Queen Anne plan,
Right next to the New Jerusalem,
The vicinity, it does not matter a—bit,
Sing tra la la la la la.

BILL NIX, The Prodigal Son. (1891) Sung by Thomas Q. Seabrook in The Isle of Champagne. Music by Josephine Cro.

¹³ O Heidelberg, dear Heidelberg, thy sons will ne'er forget,

The golden haze of student days is round about us yet.

Those days of yore will come no more, while through our manly years.

The thought of you, so good and true, will fill our eyes with tears.

FRANK PIXLEY, O Heideberg. (1902) Music by Gustave Luder. The stein song from The Prince of Posen

1 Somewhere, Somewhere, Beautiful Isle of Somewhere,
Land of the true, where we live an'w,

Beautiful Isle of Somewhere!

JESSE BROWN POUNDS, Beautiful Isle of Somewhere. (1901)

2 We'd both been there before, many a time, many a time.

CHARLES E. PROTH, Title and refrain. (1888)

3 I care not for the stars that shine,
I dare not hope to e'er be thine,
I only know I love you,
Love me, and the world is mine.

DAVID REED, JR., Love Me and the World Is Mine (1906) Music by Ernest R. Ball.

4 Shoo fly, don't bother me, shoo fly, don't bother me.

Shoo fly, don't bother me, I belong to Company C

BILL V. REEVES, Shoo Fly, Don't Bother Me. (1866) Music by Jasper Ross

5 Tramp! Tramp! Tramp! the boys are marching.

Cheer up, comrades, they will come,
And beneath the starry flag
We shall breathe the air again
Of the free land in our own beloved home.

GEORGE F. ROOS, Tramp! Tramp! Tramp! (1862)

6 Hush, little baby, don't you cry,
You'll be an angel bye and bye.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, Hush, Little Baby. (1884)

I don't care if you never come back.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD. Title and refrain of popular song. (1897)

Johnny, get your gun, get your gun today,
Pigeons a-flying all de way,
If you want to get to Heaven in de good ole way,

Johnny, get your gun, get your gun.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, Johnny, Get Your Gun. (1886) An echo of an older jingle, "Johnny, get your gun and your sword and your pistol"

Take back your gold, for gold can never buy me;
Take back your bribe, and promise you'll be true;
Give me the love, the love that you'd deny me,
Make me your wife, that's all I ask of you.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, Take Back Your Gold. (1897) The words are sometimes credited to Louis W. Pritzkow, a ballad reader with a popular minstrel troupe, who agreed to introduce the song on condition that his name be printed on the music as the lyricist, but Rosenfeld really wrote both words and music. The song was made famous by Imogene Comer, at the Bowdoin Theatre, Boston.

Cash, cash, cash! That's what we're looking for,
There's nothing like the good old Rhino!

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, There's Nothing Like It (1887) See 1333 16

With all her faults I love her still,
And even so till Death doth part!
No love like hers, my soul can thrill,
No other love can win my heart!
I love her still! I love her still,
With all her faults I love her still.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, With All Her Faults I Love Her Still. (1888)

8 Where the dear old Shannon's flowing,
Where the three-leaved Shamrock grows,
Where my heart is I am going,
To my little Irish rose.

And the moment that I meet her
With a hug and kiss I'll greet her,
For there's not a colleen sweeter
Where the River Shannon flows.

JAMES I. RUSSELL, Where the River Shannon Flows. (1906)

9 A sweet Tuxedo girl you see,
Queen of swell society,
Fond of fun as fond can be,
When it's on the strict Q. T.

Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-é. [Four times repeated]

HENRY J. SAYERS, Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-é. (1891)

The French accent proved too much for the American hoi polloi, and the title is generally given as Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay. Sayers is said to have heard the refrain in a negro resort run by "Babe" Connors, in St. Louis, Mo. Used first in a farce comedy called Tuxedo, it was afterwards made a riot in England by Lottie Collins. During a lawsuit over the song, Flora Moore made affidavit that she sang it in the United States in 1884, and others dated it back to 1878. (See SPAETH, Read 'Em and Weep, p. 163; GOLDBERG, I'm Pan Alley, p. 113.) "Q. T.," it should perhaps be explained, was slang of the period for quiet

I'm the man that wrote Ta-ra-ra, Boom-de-ay,
It has been sung in every language night and day,
I wrote it in a garret, while out with Booth and Barrett,

I'm the man that wrote Ta-ra-ra, Boom-de-ay.
JAMES THORNTON, I'm the Man That Wrote Ta-ra-ra, Boom-de-ay. (1892) Sung by Thornton in O'Dowd's Neighbors.

Oh, promise me that some day you and I
Will take our love together to some sky
Where we can be alone and faith renew,
And find the hollows where those flowers grew.
CLEMENT SCOTT, Oh, Promise Me (1888) Music by Reginald De Koven. De Koven's opera, Robin Hood, opened at Chicago, 9 June, 1890, and immediately after the performance, the famous contralto, Jessie Barlett Davis, who took the part of Alan-a-Dale, announced that she would never appear in it again, as she considered parts of the score unobtainable. In despair, De Koven chanced to remember a ballad which he had composed some time before to words by Clement Scott, and he ran it over on the piano for Miss Davis, who was delighted with it. When she sang it at the second performance the following night, it brought down the house, and was soon being sung all over the world.

My sweetheart's the man in the moon,
I'm going to marry him soon,
'Twould fill me with bliss just to give him one kiss,

But I know that a dozen I never would miss;
I'll go up in a great big balloon,

And see my sweetheart in the moon,

Then behind some dark cloud, where no one is allowed,

I'll make love to the man in the moon.

JAMES THORNTON, My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon. (1892) Popularized by Bonnie Thornton at Tony Pastor's Theatre, New York. Considered very daring in its day.

She may have seen better days,

When she was in her prime;

She may have seen better days,

Once upon a time,

Tho' by the way-side she fell,

She may yet mend her ways.

Some poor old mother is waiting for her

Who has seen better days.

JAMES THORNTON, She May Have Seen Better Days. (1894) W. H. Windom sang this in Prismore & West's minstrels. It was a successful tear producer.

⁴
One thought of mother, at home, alone,
Feeble and old and gray;

One of the sweetheart, he left in town.

Happy and young and gay;

One kissed a ringlet of thin gray hair,

One kissed a lock of brown,

Bidding farewell to the Stars and Stripes,

Just as the sun went down.

LYN UDALL, Just As the Sun Went Down.
(1898)

It takes a long tall brown-skin gal to make a preacher lay his Bible down.

MARSHALL WALKER. Title and refrain. (1917)

⁶
Come to me, sweet Marie, sweet Marie, come to me,

Not because your face is fair, love, to see,

But your soul, so pure and sweet,

Makes my happiness complete,

Makes me falter at your feet, sweet Marie.

CY WARMAN, Sweet Marie. (1893) Set to music by Ramon Moore, a famous ballad reader, and introduced by him in a musical comedy called Africa, at the Euclid Avenue Opera House, Cleveland, Ohio.

⁷ Baby dear, (sh) listen here, I'm afraid to come home in the dark—

Ev'ry day the papers say a robbery in the park

So I sat alone in the Y.M.C.A., singing just like a lark—

There's no place like home—but I couldn't come home in the dark.

HARRY WILLIAMS, I'm Afraid to Come Home in the Dark. (1907) Music by Egbert Von Alstyne.

I used to be afraid to go home in the dark,
Now I'm afraid to go at all!

HARRY H. WILLIAMS. Title and refrain.
(1908)

I could hear the dull buzz of the bee,

In the blossoms as you said to me,

"With a heart that is true,

I'll be waiting for you,

In the shade of the old apple tree."

HARRY H. WILLIAMS, In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree. (1905) Music by Egbert Von Alstyne.

⁸
Papa, mama, kiss and be friends!
I love you both, I do!

Make it all up, for your daughter's sake,

Let me go home with you:

I know you'll listen to your child,

Whose heart is filled with pain;

Papa, mama, kiss and be friends,

Kiss and be friends again.

CHARLES A. WILSON, *Papa, Mama, Kiss and
Be Friends.* (1899) Music by Leo E. Berliner.

1 Just another fatal wedding, just another broken heart.

W. H. WOODS, The Fatal Wedding. (1893) Music by Gus L. Davis.

2 I don't want to play in your yard,
I don't like you any more;

You'll be sorry when you see me
Sliding down our cellar door;
You can't holler down our rain-barrel,
You can't climb our apple-tree,

I don't want to play in your yard
If you won't be good to me.
PHILIP WINGATE, I Don't Want to Play in Your Yard. (1894) Music by H. W. Petrie.
Sung by Gus Edwards.

3 "White Wings," they never grow weary,
They carry me cheerily over the sea;
Night comes, I long for my dearie,
I'll spread out my "White Wings" and sail home to thee!

BANKS WINTER, "White Wings," (1882) A rewrite of an earlier song of the same title by Joseph Gulick, named after a popular novel of the day by William Black—hence the quotes.

4 Father, dear father, come home with me now!
The clock in the steeple strikes one.

HENRY CLAY WORK, Come Home, Father. (1862) In the second verse, the clock strikes two, and in the third verse three. Meanwhile the baby has died. Widely sung for more than a quarter of a century as a withering indictment of the Demon Rum.

5 Playmates, playmates, since we were kids so high,

And though we are gray and life's fading away
We're still playmates dear.

JACK YELLEN, Playmates. (1917) Music by Albert Crumple.

6 Linger longer, Lucy, longer linger, Loo,
How I love to linger, Lucy, linger longer you;
Listen while I sing, oh, promise you'll be true,
Linger longer, longer linger, linger longer, Loo.

WILLIE YOUNG, Linger Longer, Loo. (1893) Music by Sidney Jones. Sung by Millie Hyton in the "gaiety burlesque," Don Juan.

7 I've a letter from thy sire, Baby mine,
I could read and never tire, Baby mine;
He is sailing o'er the sea,
He is coming back to me,

He is coming back to me, Baby mine.
CHARLES MACKAY, Baby Mine. (1901)

8 Frankie and Albert were lovers, O Lordy, how they could love.

Swore to be true to each other, true as the stars above;

He was her man, and he done her wrong.

UNKNOWN, Frankie and Albert. The original version of Frankie and Johnny, the so-called St. Louis version, relating the story of the murder of Albert, or Allen, Britt, by Frankie Baker, at St. Louis, 15 Oct., 1899. (See the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 19 Oct., 1899, p. 8, col. 2.) Britt was shot on the 15th and died at the City Hospital on the night of the 18th. When he entered the hospital, he gave his occupation as job worker, and his residence as 212 Target Street. There are more than 200 versions of this song, which has become an American classic. (See JONAS HUSTON, Frankie and Johnny.)

9 Once on a time there was a wood,
The funniest wood that ever you see,
Oh, the tree in the wood, and the wood in the ground,

And the green grass growing all around, all around,

And the green grass growing all around.

UNKNOWN, The Green Grass Growing All Around. (American College Song Book, 1882.) This version is that sung by the Tufts College Glee Club, arranged by C. W. Gerould.

And the green grass grew all around.

WILLIAM JEROME. Title and refrain of song set to music by Harry Von Tilzer in 1912

10 We're here because we're here,
Because we're here, because we're here;
Oh, here we are, and here we are,
And here we are again.

UNKNOWN, Here We Are. (Soldiers' Song, 1916)

Ten thousand dollars for the folks back home.
UNKNOWN. Sung by A.E.F. funeral parties to the tune of Chopin's Funeral March.

11 When a pair of red lips are upturned to your own,

With no one to gossip about it,

Do you pray for endurance to let them alone?

Well! maybe you do, but I doubt it.

UNKNOWN, I Doubt It. (1884) Music by Richard Mansfield.

12 Is that Mr. Reilly, can any one tell?

Is that Mr. Reilly, that owns the hotel?

Well, if that's Mr. Reilly, they speak of so highly,

Well upon my soul, Reilly, you're doing quite well.

UNKNOWN, Is That Mr. Reilly? (1883) The 1636-7.

13 I've been workin' on the railroad,
All the live-long day,

I've been workin' on the railroad

Just to pass the time away,

Don't you hear the whistle blowing,

Rise up so early in the morn.

Don't you hear the captain shouting:

Dinah, blow your horn.

UNKNOWN, I've Been Workin' on the Railroad. "The most famous standby of barber-shop agonizers." It's first known publication was in Carmina Princetonia, 1894. It was called Levee Song, and no author was given.

¹ He flies through the air with the greatest of ease.

This daring young man on the flying trapeze;
His figure is handsome, all girls he can please,
And my love he purloined her away.

² My Bonnie lies over the ocean,
My Bonnie lies over the sea,

My Bonnie lies over the ocean,
Oh, bring back my Bonnie to me.

UNKNOWN, Bring Back My Bonnie to Me. (1882)

³ Like ev'ry jolly fellow,
I takes my whiskey clear,

I'm a rambling wretch of poverty,
And the son of a gambolier.

UNKNOWN, The Son of a Gambolier. A popular college song of fifty years ago.

⁴ I blow through here; the music goes 'round and around.

WILLIAM HAROLD (RED) HODGSON, The Music Goes 'Round and Around. (1931) The authorship of this insane "swing" tune, which swept the country for a while, has also been credited to Eddy Farley and Mike Riley, but Hodgson seems to have the prior claim. The song is said to have been suggested by some lines in a joke book for the Ford automobile, published in 1915:

You push the first pedal down,
The wheels go 'round and around.

⁵ Home, home on the range,
Where the deer and the antelope play;
Where seldom is heard a discouraging word,
And the skies are not cloudy all day.

DR. BREWSTER HIGLEY, The Western Home.

Written in 1873, the name of the song was afterwards changed to Home on the Range, and became very popular. It should be noted that it is not a cowboy song, for in this instance "range" has nothing to do with a cattle range or ranch, but denotes a row of townships six miles wide running north and south through a county. Higley was a Pennsylvania physician who had homesteaded near South Center, Kansas, about 1870. The music was written by Dan Kelly, a neighbor at South Center. (For history of the song see Smith County Pioneer, 19 Feb., 1914.) There have been many claimants to its authorship. The Paull-Pioneer Music Corporation has published a version ascribing the music to C. O. (Bob) Swartz, a prospector living near Leadville, Colorado, and the words to a number of his friends, placing the date of composition in 1885, and giving its name as Colorado Home. (See The Story of Colorado Home, by Kenneth S. Clark, which accompanies the music.) A modern version was written by Carson Robison in 1932, and in 1934 Mr. and Mrs. William Goodwin, of Tempe, Arizona, claimed it was an infringement of a song called Arizona Home, written by them in 1903. Both Colorado Home and Arizona Home vary slightly from Dr. Higley's Western Home, but evidently descended from it.

⁶ K-K-Katy, beautiful Katy,
You're the only g-g-g-girl that I adore,
When the m-m-m-moon shines over the cowshed,

I'll be waiting at the k-k-k-kitchen door.

GEORGE O'HARA, K-K-Katy. (1918) Popular during the World War. There were many parodies, one being:

C-c-c-cootie, horrible cootie,
You're the only b-b-b-bug that I abhor,
When the moon shines over the bunk-house,
I'll scratch my b-b-b-back until it's sore.

Then I shall be able to pull the leg of that chap Mike. He is always trying to do me.

WILLIAM BROWN CHURCHWARD, Blackbirding in the South Pacific, p. 215. (1888) This is the earliest use of this phrase in the sense of deceiving or humbugging which has been discovered. (See New English Dictionary, vi, 181.) But Thomas Hood used it in another sense in the concluding stanza of his The Last Man, written in 1826:

For hanging looks sweet,—but alas! in vain
My desperate fancy begs,—
I must turn my cup of sorrows quite up,
And drink it to the dregs,—
For there is not another man alive,
In the world, to pull my legs!

Hood is referring to the fact that, before the invention of the long drop in executions, the friends of a criminal were permitted to pull his legs in order to shorten his sufferings. (See Notes and Queries, 10th series, vii, 164, 2 March, 1907. There are a number of other communications on the same subject in N. & Q. for 1913.)

Jamie 's been drawing your leg (befooling you).
IAN MACLAREN, Beside the Bonny Brier Bush, p. 200. (1895) The phrase is used by Kipling, in his story, The Tomb of His Ancestors. (McClure's Magazine, December, 1897.)

stitched on as to glitter far and wide. (Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis Popureus, late qui splendeat, unus et alter Adsitur pannus.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 14. Macaulay is said to have popularized the phrase in referring to his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, and Maria Edgeworth used it in referring to Sir Walter Scott. See 1770:4a.

And with the morons train;
A low, receding forehead,
A silly, half-baked brain.

Because you see, gee whiz!
I like congenial spirits,
I'm lonely as it is.

Taxation without representation is tyranny.
JAMES OTIS, Argument on the Illegality of the Writs of Assistance, before the Superior Court of Massachusetts, in February, 1761. (COUSIN and HILL, American History for Schools, p. 155.) However, the only record of what Otis actually said is some rough notes by John Adams, which formed the basis of the first printed account of the speech, published in the Massachusetts Spy, 29 April, 1773. Fifty years after the event, Adams corrected his notes for William Tudor's Life of James Otis, and in a letter to Tudor, dated 9 June, 1818, he wrote (Works, x, 317): "And here he gave reins to his genius, in declamation, invective, philippic, call it what you will, against the tyranny of taxation without representation." Tudor used this paragraph in his biography (p. 77), without quotation marks, and adds, "From the energy with which he urged this position, that taxation without representation is tyranny, it came to be a common maxim in the mouth of everyone." Otis's most recent biographer, Samuel Eliot Morison, says (D.A.B., xiv, 162): "What Otis said cannot now be recovered with any exactness. . . . The phrase, 'Taxation without representation is tyranny,' which was not germane to the issue, appears only in Adams's final expansion of his notes, made about 1820." (See CANNING, History of the United States, iii, 5, note 1.)

For the acts passed in Parliament for encouraging trade and navigation, we humbly conceive, according to the usual sayings of the learned in the law, that the laws of England are bounded by the four seas, and do not reach America. The subjects of his majesty here being not represented in Parliament, so we have not looked at ourselves to be impeded in our trade by them.

It has long been my opinion that we are all educated, whether children, men or women, far more by personal influence than by books and the apparatus of schools. If I could be taken back into boyhood today, and had all the libraries and apparatus of a university, with ordinary routine professors, offered me on the one hand, and on the other a great, luminous, rich-souled man, such as Dr. Hopkins was twenty years ago, in a tent in the woods alone, I should say give me Dr. Hopkins for my college course rather than any university with only routine professors.

JAMES ABRAHAM GARFIELD, Address, before the Department of Superintendence of the National Educational Association, Washington, D. C., 31 Dec., 1877.

4 2071:2
Genius is a vagabond; Art is a vagabond; Enterprise is a Vagabond. Vagabonds have moulded the world into its present shape; they have made the houses in which we dwell, the roads on which we ride and drive, the very laws that govern us. Respectable people throng in the track of the vagabond as rooks in the track of the ploughshare. . . . Nature makes us vagabonds, the world makes us respectable.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp: On Vagabonds.

The fresh, rough, heathery parts of human nature, where the air is freshest, and where the linnets sing, is getting encroached upon by cultivated fields. Everyone is making himself and herself useful. Everyone is producing something. Everybody is clever. Everybody is a philanthropist. I don't like it. I love a little eccentricity. I respect honest prejudices. I admire foolish enthusiasm in a young head better than wise scepticism. It is high time, it seems to me, that a moral game-law was passed for the preservation of the wild and vagrant feelings of human nature.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp: On Vagabonds.

Russia seems undoubtedly . . . to be carrying on a process of absorption in Persia, and it is being done by what, I think, a French writer has called "peaceful penetration."

SIR EDWARD GREY. (Parliamentary Debates, 18 Feb., 1903.) The earliest use of the phrase "peaceful penetration" which the editor has been able to discover, Used in The Nation in 1913 (July 31, p. 103). In 1916 an Australian writer, A. D. McLaren, wrote a book by that title, placing the phrase in quotation marks, with no indication of its source. In common use since.

6 765:6

Tinker to Evers to Chance.

FRANKLIN P. ADAMS, Baseball's Sad Lexicon. Perhaps this famous line needs some elucidation. Joe Tinker, Johnny Evers and Frank Chance were members of the Chicago Cubs, the first at shortstop, the second at second base, and the third at first base. With a runner at first base, Tinker would stop a ground hit, toss the ball to Evers on second before the runner could reach it, and Evers would whip the ball to first before the man who hit the ball could get there, making a double play which was frequently repeated.

¹ This is an imitation of a Latin poem, attributed to Bonnesonius:
Semper munditias, semper, Basilissa, decores,
Semper compositas arte recente comas,
Et comptos semper cultus, unguentaque semper.

Omnia sollicita compta videre manu,
Non amo. Neglectum mihi se que comit amice
Se dei; et ornatus simplicitate valet.
Vincula ne cures capitis discussa soluti,
Nec ceram in faciem: mel habet illa suum.
Fingere se semper, non est confidere amori;
Quid quod saepe decor, cum prohibetur, adest?

The learned may find these verses among those printed at the end of the Variorum edition of Petronius. Mr. Upton imagines that there are some passages faulty in this poem: I have given it as I find it in the notes of Colomesius on some passages of Quintilian, printed in his Opuscula; He tells us, Hi versus sic legendi sunt, licet alio abest ingeniosissimus Nicolaus Heinsius ad Ovidium. Tom. I, p. 394.

³ Rulers, Statesmen, nations are wont to be emphatically commended to the teaching which experience offers in history. But what experience and history teach is this—that peoples and governments never have learned anything from history, or acted on principles deduced from it. (Was die Erfahrung aber und die Geschichte lehren, ist dieses, das Völker und Regierungen niemals etwas aus der Geschichte gelernt.)

GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH HEGEL, Philosophy of History: Introduction. Sibree, tr. Usually quoted, "The only thing we learn from history is that we learn nothing from history."

Alas! Hegel was right when he said that we learn from history that men never learn anything from history.

BERNARD SHAW, Heartbreak House: Preface.

⁴ One can resist the invasion of armies, but not the invasion of ideas. (On résiste à l'invasion des armées; on ne résiste pas à l'invasion des idées.)

VICTOR HUGO, Histoire d'un Crime: Conclusion: La Chute. Ch. 10, p. 449. Edition Nationale, Paris, 1893. Vol. 36. This sentence has been variously translated. In the Athenaeum Society edition, vol. xiv, p. 627, it is translated literally, "One resists the invasion of armies; one does not resist the invasion of ideas." William F. Giese, Victor Hugo, p. 295, renders it, "An invasion of armies can be resisted; an invasion of ideas can not be resisted." And on April 15, 1943, The Nation sent out a subscription circular with the sentence, "There is one thing stronger than all the armies in the world; and that is an idea whose time has come," stating that this was the closing entry in Victor Hugo's diary, who died the same night in his sleep. A talk with the circulation manager responsible for the circular elicited the information that, while he remembered using the quotation, he had no idea of its source or where he found it. A search by the Information Division of the New York Public Library disclosed no trace of any publication of Victor Hugo resembling a diary or journal. A similar search by the reference department of the Library of Congress was also unavailing, but the sentence from Histoire d'un Crime given above was found, and is probably the origin of the sentence quoted by The Nation, which has since become familiar in a more picturesque form, "Greater than the tread of mighty armies is an idea whose hour has come." Emerson, in his essay, Civilization, paraphrases Hugo's idea, "Gibraltar may be strong, but ideas are impregnable, and bestow on the hero their invincibility."

⁵ The Greeks Had a Word for It.

ZOX AXINS. Title of play produced in 1929. The word in question was heteros: "irregular they were, but pleasant, even as those three errant ladies—Polaire, Schatze, and Jean—who wander cynically through Miss Akina's play." —New York Times, 12 Oct. 1930, sec. 8, page 4, col. 4. In a bit of dialogue which was deleted before the play was produced, one of the characters comments, "Even the Anglo-Saxons have a word for her sort, and it's usually spelt with a dash."

⁶ THE NEW DEAL

If it is reorganization, a new deal and a change you are seeking, it is Hobson's choice. I am sorry for you, but it is really vote for me or not vote at all.

WOODROW WILSON, Address, Camden, N.J., 24 Oct., 1910. The first known use of "new deal" in a political address by a candidate for office. See Philadelphia Record, 25 Oct., 1910.

I pledge you, I pledge myself, to a new deal for the American people.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, Speech, to the Democratic National Convention, which had just nominated him for President, 3 June, 1932. In a letter to the present editor, dated 17 Feb., 1957, George W. Watt states, "F.D.R. told me, personally, that he took it [new deal] from W.W.'s speech at Camden." The phrase had, of course, been in use for many years, usually with reference to card-playing. "A new deal and a new bank" was used in a letter from John Rathbone to Nicholas Biddle in 1834. Charles Lever, in his novel Roland Cashel, ch. 13, (1849), has "Give us the cards for awhile. . . Hurrah for a new deal." Other instances are cited in The Historical Dictionary of American English.

In the field of world policy, I would dedicate this nation to the policy of a good neighbor.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, First Inaugural Address, 4 March, 1933.

If I were asked to state the great objective which church and state are both demanding for the sake of every man and woman and child in this country, I would say that that great objective is a more abundant life.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, before the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, 6 Dec., 1933. He used the phrase "A more abundant life" on several subsequent occasions. On 30 March, 1939, in a talk at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala., he said he had tried to give the Southern states "a balanced economy that will spell a higher wage scale, a greater purchasing power, and a more abundant life than they have had in all their history." Again, on 6 Nov., 1941, in an address before the Conference of the International Labor Organization, delivered in the East Room of the White House, he said, in linking world-peace to the attainment of a better world, "If that world is to be one in which peace is to prevail, there must be a more abundant life for the masses of the people of all countries."

To try to increase the security and the happiness of a larger number of people in all occupations of life; . . . to give them assurance that they are not going to starve in their old age; to give honest business a chance to go ahead and make a reasonable profit, and to give everyone a chance to earn a living.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, when asked what were the social objectives of his administration, the so-called New Deal, at a press conference, 7 June, 1935.

Yes, we are on our way back—not by mere chance, not by a turn of the cycle. We are coming back more surely than ever before because we planned it that way; and don't let anybody tell you differently.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, at Charleston, S.C., 23 Oct., 1935. The phrase, "we planned it that way," was used with considerable effect in late 1937 by the President's opponents when the country sank back into depression.

In 1776 we sought freedom from the tyranny of a political autocracy—from the eighteenth century royalists who held special privileges from the crown. . . . Since that struggle, however, man's inventive genius released new forces in our land which reordered the lives of our people. . . . Out of this modern civilization economic royalists carved new dynasties. . . . The royalists of the economic order have conceded that political freedom was the business of the Government, but they have maintained that economic slavery was nobody's business. . . . These economic royalists complain that we seek to overthrow the institutions of America.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech of Acceptance, second nomination for the Presidency, Democratic National Convention, Philadelphia, Pa., 27 June, 1936.

I see one-third of a nation ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Inaugural Address, 20 Jan., 1937.

I am reminded of four definitions: A radical is a man with both feet firmly planted—in the air; a conservative is a man with two perfectly good legs who, however, has never learned to walk; a reactionary is a somnambulist walking backwards; a liberal is a man who uses his legs and his hands at the behest of his head.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 26 Oct., 1939.

The Executive Order I have signed today is a hold-the-line order. To hold the line we cannot tolerate further increases in general wage or salary rates except where clearly necessary to correct sub-standard living conditions.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Executive Order, 8 April, 1943, designed to prevent inflation.

Clear everything with Sidney.

F. D. ROOSEVELT (?), Remark, to Robert Hannegan, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at a conference at Chicago, during the convention which nominated Mr. Roosevelt for a fourth term, June, 1944. The only contest before the convention was over the nomination of vice president, and "Sidney" was Sidney Hillman, head of the Political Action Committee of the Congress of Industrial Organizations (C.I.O.), whose support was very important to Mr. Roosevelt, and who was demanding the nomination of some one satisfactory to his organization. That Mr. Roosevelt actually said, "Clear everything with Sidney" was never admitted either by him or his advisers, but the phrase was used extensively by the Republicans during the ensuing campaign.

The first twelve years are the hardest.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Remark, at a press conference at the White House, 19 Jan., 1945, answering a question as to his reflections on what he had accomplished during his third term as President, just drawing to a close.

For other quotations from Mr. Roosevelt's speeches see Index of Authors (p. 2370), and the Index of Concordances.

An ever normal granary.

HENRY A. WALLACE, explaining the phrase of the second Agricultural Adjustment Act, passed 16 Feb., 1938, fixing a "parity price" on crops, which the Government maintained.

Modern science . . . has made it technologically possible to see that all the people of the world get enough to eat. Half in fun and half seriously I said the other day to Madame Litvinoff, "The object of this war is to make sure that everybody in the world has the privilege of drinking a quart of milk a day."

HENRY A. WALLACE, Address, before the Free World Association, New York City, 8 May, 1942. Madame Litvinoff was the wife of the Russian Ambassador to the United States.

Much of what Mr. Wallace calls his global thinking is, no matter how you slice it, still "Globaloney."

³
War is a contagion.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, Speech, Chicago, 5 Oct., 1937.

The hand that held the dagger has struck it into the back of its neighbor.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, 10 June, 1940, referring to Mussolini's declaration of war against France.

And while I am talking to you mothers and fathers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before, but I shall say it again and again and again. Your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars. [For comment see 2298i:3]

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech, Boston, Mass., 30 Oct., 1940. This was a few days before his election for a third term, defeating Wendell Willkie. "He kept us out of war," see 1558:7.

We must be the great arsenal of democracy.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 29 Dec., 1940.

The first is freedom of speech and expression—everywhere in the world. The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way—everywhere in the world. The third is freedom from want . . . everywhere in the world. The fourth is freedom from fear . . . anywhere in the world.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Message to Congress, 6 Jan., 1941. Hailed as the "four freedoms." See BAIRD, Representative American Speeches, 1940-41, p. 185.

Aid [to democracies] will be increased—and yet again increased—until total victory has been won.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech, at dinner of White House Correspondents' Association, Washington, 15 March, 1941.

We cannot save freedom with pitchforks and muskets alone after a dictator combination has gained control of the rest of the world.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 4 July, 1941.

We have sought no shooting war with Hitler. We do not seek it now. But neither do we want peace so much that we are willing to pay for it by permitting him to attack our naval and merchant ships while they are on legitimate business.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 11 Sept., 1941, referring to the attack on the U.S. destroyer Greer by a German submarine off Greenland on 4 Sept.

A new peace which will give decent people everywhere a better chance to live and prosper in security and in freedom and in faith.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 27 Oct., 1941.

Yesterday, December 7, 1941—a date that will live in infamy—the United States of America was suddenly and deliberately attacked by naval and air forces of the Empire of Japan.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Message to Congress, 8 Dec., 1941. This was the beginning of the message which asked for a declaration of war.

We are now in this war. We are in it—all the way . . . We are going to win the war, and we are going to win the peace that follows.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 9 Dec., 1941, the day after the United States had declared war on Japan and the Axis powers.

The militarists of Berlin and Tokyo started this war, but the massed angered forces of common humanity will finish it.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech, before joint session of Congress, 6 Jan., 1942.

We fight to retain a great past—and we fight to gain a greater future.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Annual Message to Congress, 7 Jan., 1943.

Soon we and not our enemies will have the offensive; we, not they, will win the final battles; and we, not they, will make the final peace.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 23 Feb., 1942.

This is the toughest war of all time.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 7 Sept., 1942.

There can be no coasting to victory.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, to closing session of the New York Herald-Tribune forum, New York City, 17 Nov., 1942.

The first crack in the Axis has come.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 28 July, 1943, referring to the invasion of Sicily.

II—Mr. Churchill and the War

1 It was for Hitler to say when the war would begin; but it is not for him or for his assistants to say when it will end. It began when he wanted it, but it will end only when we are convinced that he has had enough.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, 1 Oct., 1939.

I have nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears, and sweat.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 13 May, 1940, after being commissioned by the King to form a new government. Where Mr. Churchill got the phrase is uncertain—he may, of course, have coined it, as he did so many others—but in 1611, JOHN DONNE, An Anatomie of the World: The First Anniversary, l. 430, wrote,

"Tis in vain to dew, or mollifie
It with thy teares, or sweat, or blood."

We shall fight on beaches, landing grounds, in fields, in streets and on hills

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 4 June, 1940.

1 The battle of Britain is about to begin.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 1 July, 1940. The bombing of Britain, or "the blitz," as it was called, from the German "Blitzkrieg," meaning "lightning-war," or war conducted with lightning speed, began in August, 1940, and lasted until the end of the following May, when the Germans intensified their submarine warfare. On 5 March, 1941, A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, referred to this as "The Battle of the Atlantic, now opening."

Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 20 Aug., 1940, referring to the Royal Air Force, which had beat off the German Luftwaffe during the Battle of Britain.

We do not covet anything from any nation except their respect.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Address, broadcast to the French people, 21 Oct., 1940.

The crafty, cold-blooded, black-hearted Italian.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Broadcast, 9 Feb., 1941, referring to Benito Mussolini. In a speech at the Guildhall, London, 30 June, 1943, Churchill characterized Mussolini as "Their pinchbeck Caesar," and in a radio address of 22 June, 1941, he had referred to Hitler as "This bloodthirsty guttersnipe."

All his usual formalities of perfidy were observed with scrupulous technique.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, 21 June, 1941, referring to Hitler's invasion of Russia.

We shall not fail or falter; we shall not weaken or tire. . . . Give us the tools, and we will finish the job.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Broadcast Address, 9 February, 1941, answering American critics.

If we fail, all fails, and if we fall, all will fall together.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 29 July, 1941.

One by one—that was his plan.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, 24 Aug., 1941, referring to Hitler's plan of world conquest. "Divide and conquer was Hitler's strategy."—Newsweek, 12 Jan., 1942, p. 21. See 815:5. In 1942, the Allies set up the opposing strategy of "Unite, encircle, close in."

I am sure that at the end all will be well for us in our island home, all will be better for the world.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, Guildhall, Hull, 7 Nov., 1941.

We shall drive on to the end, and do our duty, win or die. God helping us, we can do no other.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, from London, 10 May, 1942. See 1227:5.

When the hour of liberation strikes in Europe, as strike it will, it will also be the hour of retribution.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 8 Sept., 1942.

Our defeats are but stepping-stones to victory, and his victories are only stepping-stones to ruin.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, at Edinburgh, 12 Oct., 1942. Referring to Hitler.

Let me, however, make this clear, in case there should be any mistake about it in any quarter. We mean to hold our own. I have not become the King's First Minister in order to preside over the liquidation of the British Empire.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, at the Mayor's Day Luncheon, Mansion House, London, 10 Nov., 1942.

The problems of victory are more agreeable than those of defeat, but they are no less difficult.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 11 Nov., 1942, referring to the victorious end of the African campaign.

I believe it was Bismarck who said in the closing years of his life that a dominating fact in the modern world was that the people of Britain and of the United States spoke the same language.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 11 Feb., 1943. Quoted again in his speech at Harvard University, 6 Sept., 1943.

Difficulties mastered are opportunities won.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Broadcast, 21 March, 1943.

I can imagine that some time next year—but it may well be the year after—we might beat Hitler, by which I mean beat him and his powers of evil into death, dust, and ashes.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Broadcast, 21 March, 1943.

By its sudden collapse, the proud German army has once again proved the truth of the saying, "The Hun is always either at your throat or at your feet."

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, to the U. S. Congress, 19 May, 1943.

It is a poor heart that never rejoices.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, to the U. S. Congress, 19 May, 1943. Quoting an old proverb.

We shall continue to operate on the Italian donkey at both ends, with a carrot and with a stick.
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Press Conference, 25 May, 1943.

I quote the words of your great general, Nathan Bedford Forrest, the eminently successful Confederate leader. Asked the secret of his victories, Forrest said, "I git thar fustest with the mostest men."
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Press Conference, 25 May, 1943.

Brighter and solid prospects lie before us.
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, June, 1943, after his return from a tour of the North African front.

We seek no profit, we covet no territory or aggrandisement. We expect no reward and we will accept no compromise.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, Guildhall, London, 30 June, 1943.

The time has come for you to decide whether Italians shall die for Mussolini and Hitler, or live for Italy and for civilization.

WINSTON CHURCHILL and F. D. ROOSEVELT, Joint Message, to the Italian people, 16 July, 1943.

The keystone of the Fascist arch has crumbled.
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 27 July, 1943, referring to the overthrow of Mussolini by the Italian Fascists two days earlier.

The price of greatness is responsibility.
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Address, Harvard University, 6 Sept., 1943.

The empires of the future are empires of the mind.
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, at Harvard University, 16 Sept., 1943.

III—General MacArthur and the War

Only those are fit to live who are not afraid to die.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, Address, to the Filipino air force, July 31, 1941. See CONSIDENCE, MacArthur the Magnificent, p. 9.

I shall return.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, to his fellow officers as he boarded a small patrol boat to leave the Philippines for Australia, 11 March, 1942.

I came through and I shall return.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, Pledge, upon reaching Australia from Bataan, 17 March, 1942. A few days later, on his arrival at Melbourne, MacArthur added, "I shall keep a soldier's faith." See CONSIDENCE, MacArthur the Magnificent, p. 126.

America's Holy Grail lies on Corregidor.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, Statement, on the first anniversary of the surrender of the fortress in Manila Bay, 8 May, 1943.

The inescapable price of liberty is an ability to preserve it from destruction.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, to President QUESON of the Philippines. See MILLER, MacArthur, Fighter for Freedom, p. 192.

IV—Miscellaneous

Hell, we haven't started to fight. Our artillery hasn't been overrun yet.

GENERAL TERRY ALLEN, at the invasion of Sicily, July, 1943. Reminiscent of John Paul Jones. See 62:7.

Hitler has missed the bus.

SIR NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, Speech, 4 April, 1940, referring to Hitler's invasion of Norway.

There are no atheists in the fox-holes.

REV. WILLIAM THOMAS CUMMINGS, Sermon, on Bataan, Philippine Islands, March, 1942. Father Cummings was an army chaplain. See ROMULO, I Saw the Fall of the Philippines, p. 263. Claimed also for Col. W. J. Clear.

France has lost a battle. But France has not lost the war.

GENERAL CHARLES DE GAULLE, Remark, to Winston Churchill, 17 June, 1940, the day of his arrival in London after the fall of France.

The eyes of the world are upon you. The hopes and prayers of liberty-loving people everywhere march with you.

GENERAL DWIGHT EISENHOWER, to his troops as the invasion of Normandy started, 6 June, 1944. American infantrymen had given themselves the name of GI Joes—GI meaning Government Issue, referring to all the articles issued from the Quartermaster's supplies. "GI Turkey" was corned beef, "GI Cocktail" was a dose of salts, and so on.

Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER HOWELL FORGY, navy chaplain, to a chain of men passing ammunition aboard his cruiser at Pearl Harbor, 7 Dec., 1941. Attributed also to Fleet Chaplain

William B. Maguire, who denied it. Guns will make us powerful; butter will only make us fat.

FIELD MARSHALL HERMANN GOERING, Radio Broadcast, July, 1936. Perhaps the most famous gun to come out of the war on the American side was the so-called "Bazooka," an anti-tank gun using rocket propulsion, and operated by two men. The most famous vehicle was the "jeep," a quarter-ton pygmy truck, which supposedly got its name from the initials GP (general purpose) painted on the back of the early models. On 22 Feb., 1941, one of these trucks gave an exhibition by climbing the steps of the Capitol at Washington, and when a reporter asked its driver what he called the vehicle, the driver answered, "Why, I call it a jeep. Everybody does."

We have a phrase in English, "straight from the horse's mouth."

JOSEPH CLARK GREW, Address, delivered in Tokyo, 19 Oct., 1939. This was the opening sentence of the address, which came to be known as "The horse's mouth speech," in which Mr. Grew, the United States Ambassador to Japan indicated clearly the feeling of the American government and people toward the militaristic government of Japan.

There is not sufficient room in the area of the Pacific Ocean for a peaceful America . . . and a swashbuckling Japan.

JOSEPH C. GREW, Radio Broadcast, from Washington, D.C., 30 Aug., 1942.

¹ The lamps are going out all over Europe; we shall not see them lit again in our lifetime.

VISCOUNT GREY OF FALLODEN, at the outbreak of the first World War, 3 Aug., 1914. See his Twenty-five Years, vol. ii, p. 20.

² We are the ultimate hope and sanctuary of human liberty.

HERBERT HOOVER, Address, to Pennsylvania Society of New York, 21 Dec., 1940.

³ It is better to die on your feet than to live on your knees.

DOLORES IBARRURI, (LA PASIONARIA), Speech, at Paris, 3 Sept., 1936. The phrase has been claimed for Emiliano Zapata (See GUNTHER, Inside Latin America, p. 63), but PINCHON, Zapata the Unconquerable, p. 44, quotes Zapata as saying, "Better a fighting death than a slave's life." The attribution to La Pasionaria is by American Notes and Queries.

⁴ In this tragic hour when you too are assailed by the treacherous aggressor, the people of China renew their gratitude to the people of the United States for the understanding and help that have been given us. To our now common battle we offer all we are and all we have to stand with you until the Pacific and the world are freed from the curse of brute force and endless perfidy.

CHIANG KAI-SHEK, Message, to President Roosevelt, 9 Dec., 1941.

America is not only the cauldron of democracy, but the incubator of democratic principles.

MADAME CHIANG KAI-SHEK, Speech, House of Representatives, 18 Feb., 1943.

⁵ A bloody monument to divided responsibility.

COLONEL HIGH J. KNEER, referring to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, 7 Dec., 1941. See American Mercury, June, 1942, p. 648. The result was a demand for the integration of army, navy and air force under one command, which was recommended by President Truman in a message to Congress, 19 Dec., 1945.

⁶ Sighted sub. Sank same.

DONALD FRANCIS MASON, Radio Message, to U.S. Navy Department, 26 February, 1942.

Scratch one flat-top.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER ROBERT E. DIXON, Radio Message, to his carrier after sinking Japanese carrier off Misima Island during the battle of the Coral Sea, 7 May, 1942. See JOHNSTON, Queen of the Flat-Tops, p. 181. In the battle of Midway, May, 1943, the last message radioed by a PBV pilot was, "Sighted aircraft carrier. Am trailing same. Notify next of kin."

This is it, chaps.

BRENDEN (PADDY) FINUCANE, Radio Message, to his squadron, as his plane collapsed into the English Channel, 11 Nov., 1942.

Take her down.

COMMANDER HOWARD W. GILMORE, Order, to the crew of his submarine the Crowder, during a battle against a Japanese squadron in the south Pacific, in February, 1943, as he lay mortally wounded on her deck, knowing that the delay in getting him safely into the submarine might mean its destruction.

⁷ The fifth column.

GENERAL EMILIO MOLA, Radio Address, when he was leading four columns of troops against Madrid in 1938. The "fifth column" consisted of the Franco sympathizers within the city, and the term came to be applied to all secret sympathizers and supporters of the enemy, engaged in sabotage, espionage and other subversive activities within defense lines. See Webster's New International Dictionary, 1943, p.c. Early in 1942, the term "Sixth column" was applied by Colonel Richard C. Patterson, Jr., New York State Chairman of the Defense Savings Staff, to gossipers and rumor mongers, and was adopted by President Roosevelt in a broadcast on 24 March, 1942. In July, 1942, "Seventh column" was applied to strikers or careless workers in war industries.

⁸ The Rome-Berlin axis.

BENITO MUSSOLINI, Speech, at Milan, 2 Nov., 1936. For definition see Webster's New International Dictionary, 1943, p. xcvi.

⁹ The former allies have blundered in the past by offering Germany too little, and offering even that too late, until finally Nazi Germany has become a menace to all mankind.

ALLAN NEVINS, Germany Disturbs the Peace. In Current History, May, 1935, p. 178.

It is the old trouble—too late. . . . It is always too late, or too little, or both, and that is the road to disaster.

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, Speech, House of Commons, March, 1940, the day after Finland fell.

¹⁰ We shall attack and attack until we are exhausted, and then we shall attack again.

MAJOR GENERAL GEORGE S. PATTON, Jr., Slogan, to the American troops under his command, before sailing for North Africa, 15 Nov., 1942. In the preceding August, General Sir Harold R. L. G. Alexander gave his British troops a somewhat similar slogan, "Attack, attack, and attack again, even when you are on the defensive." See Newsweek, 31 Aug., 1942, p. 25. "Back the attack" was selected as the slogan of the fifth War Loan drive, in June, 1944.

¹ In a few minutes I am going out to prepare the tomorrows that sing. (Je vais préparer tout à l'heure les lendemains qui chantent.)

² The Grumlin does the same job of sabotage on the home front that the Gremlin does to the airplanes of our pilots fighting the Axis.

SAMUEL RAYBURN, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Speech, at East Texas State Teachers College, 5 Aug., 1943. "Gremlins" was the name to the perverse imps who made things go wrong with airplanes during World War II. The first one was supposed to have been born in a beer bottle in 1923. See Newsweek, 7 Sept., 1942.

³ Bataan has fallen, but the spirit that made it stand—a beacon to all the liberty-loving peoples of the world—cannot fall!

LIEUTENANT NORMAN REYES, Radio Report, of the fall of Bataan, sent from a tunnel in the rock fortress of Corregidor, 9 April, 1942. See ROMULO, I Saw the Fall of the Philippines, p. 302.

⁴ The Seabees are always happy to welcome the Marines.

LIEUTENANT BOB RYAN, greeting to the Marines as they landed at Segi, New Georgia, Sept., 1943. "Seabees" was the nickname of the Construction Battalion of the U. S. Navy. Supposed to land with or just after the Marines, they had somehow managed to land first at Segi.

⁵ God bless America.

INTRO BERLIN. Title of song. First sung in public by Kate Smith in a radio broadcast on Armistice Day, 11 Nov., 1938.

There'll always be an England.

ROSS PARKER and HUGHIE CHARLES. Title of song written in March, 1939, and immensely popular with the English after the outbreak of the war six months later.

We'll hang out the washing on the Siegfried line.

UNKNOWN. Title of popular British song soon after the start of the war, September, 1939.

The last time I saw Paris.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, II. Title of lyric, from the moving picture, Lady Be Good. (1940) Title of book of reminiscences of Paris by Elliot Paul.

All Out for America.

JOHN ADAMS. Title of marching song of the U.S.A. Music by Mayhew Lake. (c. 1941)

⁶ Expedience and justice frequently are not even on speaking terms.

ARTHUR H. VANDERBURG, Speech, in U. S. Senate, 8 March, 1945, referring to the decision made at Yalta by Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin to cede eastern Poland to Russia.

⁷ Suppose you're a sergeant machine-gunner, and your army is retreating and the enemy advancing. The captain takes you to a machine gun covering the road. "You're to stay here and hold this position," he tells you. "For how long?" you ask. "Never mind," he answers, "just hold it." Then you know you're expendable. In a war anything can be expendable—money or gasoline or equipment or most usually men. They are expending you and that machine gun to get time.

W. L. WHITZ, They Were Expendable, p. 3.

⁸ The people of Germany are just as responsible for Hitler as the people of Chicago are for the Chicago Tribune.

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT, his last words before collapsing at the microphone, 23 Jan., 1943, where he was taking part in a "People's Platform" program on the subject "Is Germany incurable?" He died a few hours later.

⁹ China incident.

The Japanese-coinced phrase for the "incident" which started the attack upon China on the night of 7 July, 1937, when the Japanese held large-scale military maneuvers near Lukou-chiao and alleged afterwards that one of their men was missing. See China Handbook, 1937-1943, p. 350.

¹⁰ South America becomes very quivering conscious.

UNKNOWN, Time, 24 May, 1940, p. 40. A new word for a traitor or collaborator with the enemy, deriving from Vidkun Quisling, head of the Norwegian Nazi party, who was appointed head of the Nazi-sponsored government after the German invasion of Norway in April, 1940. He was condemned to death as a traitor and executed on 24 October, 1945. All of the Allied governments had their Quislings. The outstanding French one was Pierre Laval, executed in November, 1945. The most famous British one was "Lord Haw Haw," the microphone name of William Joyce, an American who had gone to Germany on a British passport and began broadcasting German propaganda from Berlin soon after the start of the war. He was captured by the British shortly after the German surrender and executed in London, 3 January, 1946. On 26 July, 1943, the District of Columbia Federal Grand Jury indicted eight Americans living abroad for treason, including Frederick Wilhelm Kaltenbach, known as "The American Lord Haw-Haw"; Douglas Chandler, one-time Baltimore columnist, whose nickname was "Paul Revere"; Edward Leo Delaney, known as E. D. Ward; and Ezra Pound, the well-known poet, all of them for broadcasting enemy propaganda, Pound from Italy and the others from Germany. In a letter to the compiler the Department of Justice states that Kaltenbach died in Germany prior to the end of the war; Pound was declared mentally incapable to stand trial and was confined in St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Washington, D.C., where he still is (27 Dec., 1948); Chandler and Robert H. Best were convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment; the case against Delaney was presented to a New York grand jury, which voted a no true bill. Two others of those indicted were Constance Drexell and Jane Anderson, but both indictments were dismissed. Jane Anderson was never apprehended. By January, 1950, there were twelve such convictions, the latest being that of H. J. Burzman, of Hokah, Minn.

I said to a man who stood at the gate of the year: "Give me a light that I may tread safely into the unknown." And he replied, "Go out into the darkness and put your hand into the hand of God. That shall be to you better than a light and safer than a known way."

MINNIE L. HASKINS, The Desert: Introduction. (c. 1920) Quoted by King George VI, of England, Christmas Day broadcast, 1939. The Desert was a small volume of verse published privately by its author, a teacher in the London School of Economics. See Time, 8 Jan., 1940.

A shadow has fallen upon the scenes so lately lighted by the Allied victory. From Stettin in the Baltic to Trieste in the Adriatic, an iron curtain has descended across the continent.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Address, at Westminster College, Fulton, Mo., 5 March, 1946. It was this use of the phrase by Churchill which popularized it, but it had been used in the same connection forty years earlier:

Redwood had still imperfectly apprehended the fact that an iron curtain had dropped between him and the outer world.

H. G. WELLS, The Food of the Gods. Bk. III, ch. 4, pt. 1. (1904) Repeated in pt. 3.

Mexico . . . with a deep rooted grievance, and an iron curtain at its frontier.

GEORGE M. CRILE, A Mechanistic View of War and Peace. Ch. 4, p. 69. (1915) The phrase perhaps derives from the iron curtain formerly lowered in larger theatres to prevent fire spreading from stage to audience.

Are you in earnest? seize this very minute—
What you can do, or dream you can, begin it,
Boldness has genius, power, and magic in it.
Only engage, and then the mind grows heated—

Begin it, and the work will be completed!
(Das Mögliche soll der Entschluss
Beherzt sogleich beim Schopfe fassen;
Er will es dann nicht fahren lassen,
Und wicket weiter, weil er muss.)

JOHANN WOLFGANG VON GOETHE, Faust: Vorspiel auf dem Theater, l. 227. (1806) As translated by JOHN ANSTER, Faustus, A Dramatic Mystery: Prelude at the Theatre, l. 303. (1835) It will be noted that Anster's translation is a very free one—really a paraphrase, or, as some one has said, the translation of a poet by a poet. Later renderings, while usually more literal, are much less successful as poetry. Here is that of James Adey Birds (London, Longmans, 1880, p. 94):

Resolve, and in your own selves trust,
Grasp by the forelock what you've got,
And take heed ye loose it not;
But work away because you must.

And here is George Madison Priest's latest revision of his translation of the same passage (New York, Knopf, 1941, p. 10):

With resolution seize the possible straightway
By forelock and with quick, courageous trust;
Then holding fast you will not let it further fly
And you will labour on because you must.

John Anster was an Irishman, born at Charleville, County Cork, in 1793. After publishing one or two small volumes of verse, he began his translation of Goethe, and in 1820 translations of various passages appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, being the first rendering into English of any part of Faust. The complete translation of the first part appeared in 1835, and that of the second part not until 1864, three years before Anster's death.

"Oh, what a superior man!" said Candide to himself. "What a prodigious genius is this Pococurante! Nothing can please him." (Oh! quel homme supérieur! disait Candide entre ses dents; quel grand génie que se Pococurante! Rien ne peut lui plaire.)

VOLTAIRE, Candide. Ch. 25. (1758) The entire chapter is devoted to a description of Candide's visit to the home of the "Noble Venetian," Pococurante (Ital., poco curante, little caring), who detested Raphael, Homer, Vergil, Horace, Cicero and Milton, as well as music and the theatre. The saying is quoted by Fortune (Nov., 1948, p. 204) in referring to John L. Lewis.

Mr. Trotter, it is easy for you to play the pococurantist.

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, Fanny's First Play: Epilogue. (1911) Used here in the sense of taking nothing seriously, of being indifferent to matters of importance.

The modernization of the Hippocratic Oath by the World Medical Association, known as the Declaration of Geneva (1948), is worthy of note. It runs: "Now being admitted to the profession of medicine, I solemnly pledge to consecrate my life to the service of humanity. I will give respect and gratitude to my deserving teachers. I will practice medicine with conscience and dignity. The health and life of my patients will be my first consideration. I will hold in confidence all that my patient confides in me. I will maintain the honor and noble traditions of the medical profession. My colleagues will be my brothers. I will not permit consideration of race, religion, nationality, party politics or social standing to intervene between my duty and my patient. I will maintain the utmost respect for human life from its conception. Even under threat I will not use my knowledge contrary to the laws of humanity. These promises I make freely and upon my honor.

1 If I should ever be in England's thought
After I die, Say, "There were many things he might have bought

And did not buy!
Unhonoured by his fellows, he grew old
And trod the path to Hell,
But there were many things he might have sold,

And did not sell!"
THOMAS W. H. CROSLAND, Epitaph.

2 Climb high, Climb far,
Your goal the sky, Your aim the star.

ALBERT HOPKINS (?), Inscription, on Hopkins Gate, Williams College. Found among the papers of Prof. Hopkins after his death, copied perhaps from some unknown source.

3 Cold war.

HERBERT BAYARD SWOPE. In a letter to the compiler, Mr. Swope writes: "I have been using the phrase 'cold war,' as B. M. Baruch and others will confirm, since 1945, several months before the death of President Roosevelt. I put it in writing in one or two letters in 1946. . . . I put it in a speech that Baruch made to the South Carolina legislature on the unveiling of his portrait there by the State, 16 April, 1947." This was the first public use of the phrase.

Let us not be deceived—we are today in the midst of a cold war.

BERNARD M. BARUCH, Speech, before South Carolina Legislature, 16 April, 1947.

In the interview, which was brief, Baruch said he was the first person to use the phrase "cold war." He said it was suggested to him by Herbert Bayard Swope, former editor of the defunct New York World.

Interview, with Mr. Baruch in Boston Globe, 1 April, 1949.

4 When I joined the army, even before the turn of the century, it was the fulfilment of all my boyish hopes and dreams. . . . I still remember the refrain of one of the most popular barracks ballads of that day, which proclaimed most proudly that old soldiers never die; they just fade away. And like the old soldier of that ballad, I now close my military career and just fade away.

GENERAL OF THE ARMY DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, Address, before a joint meeting of the United States Congress, Washington, D.C., 19 April, 1951.

The ballad General MacArthur referred to derives from a gospel hymn, "Kind Words Can Never Die," written about 1855 by "Sister" Abby Hutchinson, a member of a well-known group of evangelists who toured the country for over thirty years in the middle of the last century. The first stanza is as follows:

Kind words can never die,
Cherished and blest,
God knows how deep they lie,
Lodged in the breast;
Like childhood's simple rhymes,
Said o'er a thousand times,
Go through all years and climes,
The heart to cheer.

Chorus: Kind words can never die, never die,
never die,

Kind words can never die, no never die.

There are three additional stanzas, "Childhood can never die," "Sweet thoughts can never die," and "Our souls can never die." The version given here is taken from "Woman in Sacred Song," p. 457, published by D. Lothrop & Company in 1885.

In 1858 the chorus was added when the hymn was set to music by Horace Waters. Whether it was written by Waters or by Miss Hutchinson is uncertain, but it was this chorus which furnished the inspiration for "Old Soldiers Never Die."

The Hutchinsons toured the Union Camps widely during the Civil War, much as the USO entertainers do today, and the chorus was soon picked up by the soldiers and parodied in various ways, most of them extremely bawdy. There is an impression that it is of English origin, due probably to the fact that it first appeared in print, so far as known, in an English book, "Tommy's Tunes," page 58, published in London in 1917, which gives two stanzas:

Old soldiers never die, never die, never die,
Old soldiers never die, they always fade away.
This rain will never stop, never stop, never stop,
This rain will never stop—No, no, no, no, no.

It was sung by British soldiers during the first World War, usually as "They simply fade away." But General MacArthur's memory was correct, for the West Point version is "They just fade away." There is a legend at West Point that it was written by General Charles P. Sumner, who graduated in 1892, eight years before General MacArthur became a cadet, but, as Mr. Richard S. Hill, reference librarian of the Music Division of the Library of Congress writes to the compiler, "I would be profoundly suspicious of any attribution to any person living or dead, but particularly suspicious of any attribution to a General. Soldier songs rarely grow that way."

¹ The stairway of time ever echoes with the wooden shoe going up and the polished boot coming down.

JACK LONDON, What Life Means to Mr. In Cosmopolitan Magazine, March, 1906. See also Carl Sandburg's The People, 1936. The origin of this saying is of course much older, and in various versions it has been attributed to Voltaire, Balzac, Hugo, and others, but the present editor has been unable to find it in their works. One version is "History is silver slippers walking down the steps and wooden clogs climbing up." The same idea as that of the Lancashire proverb, cited by Notes and Queries, (4th ser., vii, 472, 1871) "Clogs to clogs is only three generations," or by the American "Three generations from shirtsleeves to shirtsleeves."

² In 1768, we find in Protestant England John Wesley standing firmly for witchcraft, and uttering his famous declaration, "The giving up of witchcraft is in effect the giving up of the Bible."

ANDREW DICKSON WHITE, A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology, Vol. i, p. 363. (1896) In a footnote Mr. White enumerates statements from Increase Mather, Cotton Mather, Deodat Lawson, and many others, indicating a belief in witchcraft.

I cannot give up to all the Deists in Great Britain the existence of witchcraft, 'till I give up the credit of all history, sacred and profane.

JOHN WESLEY, Journal, 23 May, 1776.

³ In almost all of his other addresses in which FDR promised not to send American boys to fight in foreign wars he added the phrase "except in case of attack," or "unless we are attacked," but he did not use this phrase in his speech at Boston. Here is what Sam Rosenman has to say about it in his Working With Roosevelt, p. 242: "Every time the President had made this statement before Boston—and every time thereafter—he added to it the words he himself had so carefully added to the foreign policy plank: 'Except in case of attack.' I suggested that he add the same words this time but he suddenly got stubborn about it—I could not understand why. 'It's not necessary,' he said. 'If we're attacked it's no longer a foreign war.'" (See 2298b:3)

⁴ I had become one of the notoriety of the metropolis of the world. . . . You could not take up a newspaper, English, Scotch, or Irish, without finding in it one or more references to the "vest-pocket million pounder" and his latest doings and sayings. At first, in these mentions, I was at the bottom of the personal-gossip column; next, I was listed above the knights, next above the barons, and so on, . . . until I reached the highest altitude possible, and there I remained, taking precedence of all dukes not royal, and of all ecclesiastics except the Primate of all England.

MARK TWAIN, The Million Pound Banknote. (1893) Probably the first use of "gossip column."

⁵ One world at a time.

HENRY DAVID THOREAU, Remark, shortly before his death in 1862, to Parker Pillsbury, "who would fain talk with Thoreau in this last winter concerning the next world." (F. B. SANBORN, Henry D. Thoreau, p. 314, 1882.) Parker Pillsbury, anti-slavery orator, was an old friend of Thoreau. Brooks Atkinson, who refers to "the pontifical Frank Sanborn, sole custodian of Thoreau," says the visitor was William Elery Channing, Thoreau's "closest friend." (Walden and Other Writings of Thoreau.)

When a pious visitor inquired sweetly, "Henry, have you made your peace with God?" he replied, "We have never quarrelled."

J. BROOKS ATKINSON, Henry Thoreau, the Cosmic Yankee, p. 29. (1927)

⁶ My grandfather, William H. Vanderbilt, had, considering his numerous philanthropic gifts, an unmerited reputation for indifference to the welfare of others. It was, as is often the case, founded on a remark shorn of its context. This is the version of the "public be damned" story that was given me by a friend of the family. Mr. Vanderbilt was on a business trip and, after a long and arduous day, had gone to his private car for a rest. A swarm of reporters arrived asking to come on board for an interview. Mr. Vanderbilt sent word that he was too tired and did not wish to give an interview, but would receive one representative of the press for a few minutes. A young man arrived saying, "Mr. Vanderbilt, your public demands an interview." This made Mr. Vanderbilt laugh, and he answered, "Oh, my public be damned!" In due course the young man left and next morning his article appeared in the paper with a large headline reading, "Vanderbilt Says 'The Public be Damned.'"

CONSEUZO VANDERBILT BALBAN, The Glitter and the Gold, p. 3. (1952) See 1480:10.

⁷ In his Working With Roosevelt, pp. 90-91, Sam Rosenman states that Roosevelt had been reading Thoreau at the time he was preparing his inaugural address, and that in all probability Thoreau's sentence had struck him as given in 655:15, and that he paraphrased it in his inaugural address.

¹ It was now the Virginian's turn to bet, or leave the game, and he did not speak at once. Therefore Trampas spoke. "Your bet, you son-of-a——."

The Virginian's pistol came out, and his hand lay on the table, holding it unaimed. And with a voice as gentle as ever, the voice that sounded almost like a caress, but drawling a very little more than usual, . . . he issued his orders to the man Trampas:—

"When you call me that, smile!" And he looked at Trampas across the table.

Yes, the voice was gentle. But in my ears it seemed as if somewhere the bell of death was ringing; and silence, like a stroke, fell on the large room.

OwEN WISTER, The Virginian. Ch. II, p. 28. (1902) See 1852:13.

² However, Sir Roderick Jones, in his book A Life in Reuters, p. 42, states that when Kipling wrote If he had in mind a devoted friend, Sir Leander Starr Jameson, leader of the ill-fated Jameson Raid in 1895. (See 1930:11)

INDEX OF AUTHORS

SUGGESTIONS FOR USING THE INDEX OF AUTHORS

THE INDEX OF AUTHORS includes the name of every person quoted in this book, together with the dates of his birth and death, and a brief characterization giving his nationality and occupation. (A blank death date indicates that the person was still living May 1, 1937, when this index was completed.) Where these biographical data are missing or incomplete, the editor will greatly appreciate information which will enable him to fill them in.

If the number of quotations from an author's works does not exceed 150, the pages on which the quotations appear are also given. If the number is in excess of 150, the name is preceded by a star. There are a few exceptions to this, the quotations from W. S. Gilbert, Thomas Jefferson, Rudyard Kipling, Bernard Shaw, Robert Louis Stevenson, H. D. Thoreau, Mark Twain, Voltaire, Walt Whitman, and Oscar Wilde being listed in full because of the special interest in their work. It was felt that to list the quotations from all authors would encumber the index unreasonably; those from such writers as Shakespeare and Pope, for example, number perhaps a thousand, and the figures listing them would occupy nearly four columns of space.

There are four ways in which the index may be used to advantage:

- (1) To check the quotations from any author's work.
- (2) To find a quotation where the author is remembered, but the quotation itself only indistinctly. For example, if one is searching for a quotation by Walt Whitman and all that is remembered is that it has something to do with the sea, one need only look up the quotations by Whitman between pages 1771 and 1782.
- (3) To ascertain what any author has to say on any given subject. If one wishes to know what Oscar Wilde has to say about women, for instance, the Wilde quotations should be consulted for pages 2178-2208.
- (4) To find a quotation whose supposed key-word cannot be turned up in the CONCORDANCE, but whose author is known. Key-words are sometimes wrongly remembered, or perhaps the editor has chosen some other word in the quotation as the most important. Again it is only necessary to check the quotations by the author in question, in the section in which the desired quotation would naturally fall.

The following abbreviations are used: b. = born; c. = circa, about; d. = died; fl. = flourished, indicating an author's period when his exact dates are not known; pseud. = pseudonym.

INDEX AND CONCORDANCE

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE USE OF THE CONCORDANCE

THE CONCORDANCE is a word-index to all the quotations in the book, grouped alphabetically by leading words and phrases, with a reference not only to the page on which the quotation may be found, but also to its number on the page, so that it may be turned to instantly. The first entry in the index on the following page is 39:13, which means the thirteenth quotation on page 39. Identifying words and phrases are generously given, in order that a quotation which is not exactly remembered may be traced through any one of a number of channels.

Let us suppose that the phrase which is being sought is, "The conscious water saw its God, and blushed." Perhaps all that is remembered of it is that it has something to do with water seeing God, or with water blushing. In either case it would be evident that the place to look for it is under "Water." It could of course be looked for in the text under that subject, where it would be found (2124:14), with a cross-reference to "Miracle," where the whole quotation, together with several variations, has been placed, because it has to do with the miracle of turning water into wine. But the easier way would be to look under "Water" in the CONCORDANCE, where two entries referring to it will be found, "conscious water saw its God," and "saw its God and blushed," both referring directly to the main quotation, 1315:14. And it will also be found under "Blushed" ("saw its God and b."), in case any one should happen to look there first.

So with every quotation in the book. The word selected for the index entry is always the noun—if there is a noun—which is the subject of the sentence, in the above case "Water." But many others are thrown in for good measure, as "Blushed" is in this instance, so that the quotation may be found even if the principal noun is incorrectly remembered. "Chip of the old block," for example, is entered under both "Chip" and "Block." Where there is no noun, the principal adjective or verb is used. "Absent one from another" will be found under "Absent." "Who excuses accuses" will be found under both "Accuses" and "Excuses." An effort has also been made to include all unusual words and phrases by which a quotation might stand out in the memory. "A biscuit or two with Brie" is naturally indexed under "Biscuit," but it will be found also under "Brie."

The only exception to this detailed indexing is where the subject is a very short one. The black-letter lines in the CONCORDANCE indicate subject-headings in the body of the book, and where the subject runs less than a column of text, such as "Abstinence," the quotations under this subject carrying this word are not indexed separately unless they are unusually important, and the reader should turn at once to the subject itself and run through the entries under it—a matter of a moment. Where the same key-word occurs in quotations under other headings it is, of course, indexed. Thus, under the black-letter subject-heading "Abstinence" in the CONCORDANCE will be found two entries from quotations on other pages. This system was adopted in order to keep the CONCORDANCE free from unnecessary entries, and to hold it within manageable proportions.

Some niceties of the alphabetical arrangement should perhaps be explained. Under each subject the singular noun comes first ("God," for example); then the singular possessive ("God's"); then the hyphenated compounds ("God-like"); then the plural ("Gods"); and finally the plural possessive ("Gods'"). Proper nouns precede common nouns. All foreign-language quotations follow the English ones, even if the key-word is identical, so that the French entries beginning with "Art," for instance, will be found immediately after the English ones beginning with the same word. It should also be remembered that a word is sometimes spelled in different ways, as "blessed" and "blest." Cross-references call attention to this, and both spellings should be consulted, as the text follows the style used by the author.

All entries necessarily are very brief, but an effort has been made to give sufficient context to enable the reader to identify the quotation readily. It should be pointed out, however, that the mind of the reader will not always run exactly in accord with the mind of the indexer, and the phrase which springs to the reader's memory may not be the exact one which the indexer has chosen, in which case a little perseverance may be necessary to turn up the quotation desired.

No one can get the full benefit of this book without understanding thoroughly the use of the CONCORDANCE, for it is the key to its contents, and if the reader will spend a little time familiarizing himself with the suggestions given above he will find the book much more useful and satisfactory than it could otherwise be.
